

Babysits pool

John Vesel displays his pool monitor which, in effect, babysits swimming pools when no one is around. Gadget reads waves caused by someone who may jump or fall in the pool and sounds the alarm. Monitor costs about $280.

Monitor tells when someone is in your swimming pool

You may give your child all the swimming lessons you feel he needs to be drownproofed, but there is always that nagging feeling in the back of your mind when your child is out of sight. What about the neighbor's child who cannot swim? Will that fence keep him out? It seems as if every summer, a toddler falls into a swimming pool and drowns. A Thornhill company has invented a device that may calm these worries for many pool owners. The pool monitor sets off an alarm when someone enters a swimming pool when the monitor is turned on. It is a brainchild of Charles Rhodes and John Vesel, two PhDs who have set up a company, Adaptive Micro Electronics, located on Glen Cameron Road. The pool monitor works with a sensor in the pool which picks up the waves made by someone jumping or falling in, says Vesel. The monitor costs $280; that is half the cost of a similar American system and the installation of the pool monitor is much simpler, Vesel said.

The unit is placed inside the pool at the edge. The sensor is two and a half inches in diameter and 15 inches long. The main box is nine and a half inches high, seven inches wide and three and a half inches deep. Because it is operated from a six-volt lantern battery, Vesel says there is no shock hazard. The company brought out a new model this year and it "wasn't quite ready" for the start of the pool season. A prime source of sales is expected to be to people with pools and small children. So far, most sales have been through security dealers rather than swimming pool installers. The unit could be used for motel swimming pools, but this has not been pushed because of restrictions on in-ground pools. A commercial pool would require special installations. The company will probably be working on a model for commercial use for next year. The pool monitor is actually just a sideline for Adaptive Micro Electronics. "Our primary product is a micro-computer controlled energy saving system," said Vesel who worked on space craft power systems in California before the company was set up in 1974. The system minimizes energy requirements on buildings that operate heating, ventilating and air conditioning equipment, said Vesel. After developing the product for a year, marketing is now starting. It is estimated it will save buyers 20 per cent on fuel bills.

300 Hill Witnesses to attend assembly

Jehovah's Witnesses will convene this summer in 15 cities throughout Canada with a total of 22 conventions on the agenda. John Bell, spokesman for the Richmond Hill group, said nearly one million people are expected at the "Joyful Workers'" district conventions. He said 300 delegates from Richmond Hill will attend a four-day assembly scheduled for the Woodbine Racetrack in Toronto. About 12,000 people are anticipated to attend that meeting August 11 to 14, he said. "It has been revealed that 2,333,115 people attended our conventions world wide in 1976," Mr. Bell said. "This included meetings in 56 countries." Mr. Bell said the conventions are designed to discuss the pressures affecting modern society in day-to-day living. "The program is divided into four sections," he said, "including information on training children, responsibility of youth in today's world, making a success of marriage and the problems affecting family life."

Task Force seeks homes in Region

The Emergency Housing Task Force of York Region is looking for residents willing to open their homes to people in need.

In a recent one-day period, the registry tried to handle four such calls, but it is difficult to place families. Since the registry operates as an agency referral service, the majority of the persons placed in the homes have an agency worker who handles contacts with the registry and the homeowner.

Operating for the past year and a half, the task force operates a registry that provides short-term accommodation for people in emergency situations. While the registry is basically an agency resource-referral service, the co-operation of the general public in providing homes ensures the success of the program, said summer co-ordinator Kim Hodgins. Recent calls have included an 18-year-old youth on probation; a family with no immediate funds being evicted from its home; a teenager leaving an upsetting home situation, enabling him to take the time he needed to determine his future, and a mother needing time to think after leaving her husband.

The task force includes representatives from the Children's Aid Society, the Ministry of Community and Social Services, York Central Hospital's Mental Health Clinic, York Region's Health and Social Services Departments, the Richmond Hill Social Planning Council and Helpmate Information Centre, Probation and Parole Services. The majority of the people using the service are residents of York Region, necessitating the appeal to York Region residents. For more information on the registry contact Kim Hodgins at 898-1551 in Newmarket.

The principal address of the convention will be delivered by L. Greenlees of New York, Sunday, August 14 at 2 p.m. His subject will be "How God's Kingdom Can Benefit You".
