

Hospital's Hepburn achieves high honor

York Central Hospital's Executive Director, James C. Hepburn ranks high on the list of hospital administrators, according to the American College of Hospital Administrators.

Earlier this fall, he was invited to Anaheim, California, to be one of 90 recipients of a Fellowship in the American College of Hospital Administrators. Of the 90 recipients, only five were Canadian.

To be eligible for the Fellowship, several qualifications and specifications must be met. One must first be a nominee in the College for several years. Mr. Hepburn was just such a nominee for five years before he was accepted as a member of the college in 1968.

Shortly after that, in May of 1969 he came to York Central as Administrator and he remained ever since in the same job, only the title has been changed to Executive Director.

JIM HEPBURN

One of the most important pre-requisites for acceptance as a Fellow is the efficiency of the hospital the applicant administers.

York Central Hospital has never failed to be accredited, and that means that it ranks among the best run hospitals in the country.

This was important for Mr. Hepburn when he was hoping for his Fellowship, because the efficiency of the hospital naturally reflects on the person at the top.

Other requirements for the Fellowship included the writing of an eight-hour examination consisting of 299 pages of writing.

That, and a one-hour oral examination taken in French are what Mr. Hepburn figures clinched the Fellowship for him.

The final requirement for each person hoping for a Fellowship in the American College of Hospital Administrators is that they must be nominated by at least three other Fellows.

Before coming to Richmond Hill, Jim Hepburn and his family lived in Napanee, where he was the Administrator of the Lennox and Addington General Hospital during its construction stages and after it opened.

The Hepburns, Jim, his wife, Carol, and their two children live in Markham.

Aside from dad being involved in hospital work, Carol is an active hospital auxiliary member as well.

Jim attributes his success at York Central Hospital to his efficient right hand, Madelaine Cole, his secretary.

He says he believes that behind every good executive there are two women. "His wife who tells him what to do, and his secretary who makes sure that he does it."

Policies would protect farmland

About 54,000 acres was taken out of agricultural production in York Region between 1961 and 1976, according to a regional planning document to be considered by council this Thursday.

The regional planning department is advocating policies that would protect the rest of York's agricultural industry.

"Of the region's 400,000 rural acres, 280,000 acres are rated to have a high agricultural capability. . . . Almost half of this rural land is rated class 1, the highest soil capability. Approximately 57 per cent of the 400,000 acres was in active farm use in 1976.

"York shares with Simcoe County the largest single marsh for the production of vegetables in Canada, the Holland Marsh," states the report. The area represents "at least 40 per cent of the vegetable producing acreage in Ontario."

In the last census year, 1971, farm products from York sold for a total of about $36 million. The total investment in farming in York is estimated at $700 million.

The regional planners have split the region's farmland into agriculture one and agriculture two zones, and all nine of the region's municipalities have some agricultural land in these zones. Only in the agriculture two zone is even rural residential development (housing on one or two acre lots) to be permitted.

All the farmland left in Richmond Hill between Bayview Avenue and Highway 404 and north of Sixteenth Avenue is included in the agriculture one zone.

So is nearly all of Markham north of Sixteenth Avenue and three sections of Vaughan, one on both sides of Dufferin Street north of the Langstaff Road, another between Maple and the town's northern boundary, and a third between the Humber River and the town's western boundary.

The policy, as drafted, provides that within the agricultural priority areas, the dominated land use shall be farming.

Non-agricultural uses within both agricultural priority areas are to be located in villages and hamlets.

The staff is recommending that regional council adopt the agricultural policy for the purpose of putting it before the public for discussion.
