WHO SHALL JUDGE A MAN.

AN OLD POEM.

Who shall know him by his dress ? Paupers may be fit for princes, Princes fit for something less. Crumpled shirt and dirty jacket

May be lothe the golden ore Of the deepest thoughts and feelings-Satin vests could do more. God, who counts by souls, not dresses.

Loves and prospers you and me, While he values thrones the highest But as pebbles in the sea. Man, upraised above his fellows,

Oft forgets his fellows then; Masters, rulers, lords, remember That your meanest hinds are men-Men by labor, men by feeling, Men by thought and men by fame Claiming equals rights to sunshine In a man's ennobbling name.

There are foam embroidered oceans, There are little weed clad ril s, There are feeble inch-high saplings, There are cedars on the hills. God, who counts by souls not stations Loves and prospers you and me,

For to him all vain distinctions Are as pebbles in the sea. Toiling hands alone are builders Of a nation's wealth and fame; Tittled laziness is pensioned,

Fed and fattened on the same, By the sweat of other's foreheads, Living only to rejoice, Whilst the poor outraged freedom Vainly lifteth up its voice.

Truth and justice are eternal, Born with loveliness and light; Secret wrongs shall never prosper While there is a sunny right; Boundless love to you and me, Sinks oppression with its trifles, As the pebbles in the sea.

MR. RUSSEL'S DESCRIPTION OF THE BATTLE OF THE ALMA.

Our readers are aware that Mr Russel, late the Times' commissioner in the Crimea, is now delivering in Glasgow his lectures on the war. The Gasgow Examiner gives a report of his lectures. We select a passage. descriptive of the battle of the Alma, which has all the fire and glow of Mr Russel's best style. The sketch is carefully prepared, and its perusal is an intellectual treat :-
