LIFE'S A RAILROAD.

Life's a railroad! Hurry on! Always keep a-going! Never go to look at flowers By the wayside growing. Never think of anything But your present hurry; What if you should loose a train? Wouldn't you be sorry ? What's the use of sighing so After beauty? lying Ha'f asleep beneath the trees

Where the winds are dying. Where, through winding cattle-paths Creep the lazy hours; And the slow-paced seasons walk O'er unconscious flowers.

Beauty changes with the times: Once she close her shelter In the shadowy solitudes, Lest the sun might melt her, Stronger-breathed, she dashes on,

Now from town to city; In a locomotive shape, Nothing half so pretty. Life was once a tradden path, Where the travellers cheery, Spoke to all they chanced to meet, Or would rest, if weary.

Rest is now quite obsolete: Sips of slumber take you, Careless who behind you sits, Nor what chance may wake you, Life's railroad! Hurry on! Always keep a-going! Never stop to look at flowers

By the roadside growing. Never mind what's on h track; On-though head swims-faster; If the engine's progress stops, That's the great disaster.

AN ODD STORY.

One little act of politeness will sometimes pave the way to fortunes and preferment. The following sketch fully illustrates this fact :-

A sailor, roughly garbed, was saun- crossing the street. tering through the streets of New Orleans, then in a rather damp condition from recent rain and rise of the tide. Turning the corner of a much frequented alley, he observed a young M. MORRISON, Agent, lady standing in a perplexity, apparently measuring the depth of the muddy water between her and the opposite sidewalk with no very satisfied countenance.

One night the young man, with all the officers, was invited to an entertainment at the captain's house.-He went, and to his astonishment, mounted the identical steps up which two years before had tripped the tright vision he had never forgotten. Thump went his brave heart, as he was ushered into the great parlor; and like a sledge hammer it beat again, when Captain Hume introduced his blueeved daughter, with a pleasant smile, as "the young lady once indebted to your politeness for a safe and dry walk home.
