THE SUMMER DAYS ARE PAST

It seems but yesterday, the woods Were robed in living green, No sign, no token of decay, No fading leaf was seen. Among the woods no more we hear

The cheerful wild-birds' glees, But cold November's chilly blasts Moan dismally 'mong the trees. The sky has lost the soft warm bue It wears in summer time,

The radiance that might so well Befit a sunnier clime. But even now the morning breaks Upon a bleaker sky-Already by the autumn winds Storm clouds are hurried by.

The summer birds have sought a land Where softer zephyrs blow, The sweetest of the summer flowers Have faded long ago.

The summer breeze, among the trees, Oft dreamily would sigh; Now with a sharp, cold, shivering sound, The evening winds sweep by.

Already have the corn leaves felt The frost-king's chilly breath, It is as if he heralded His coming reign of death. As if the dreary winter time, . Its shadows backward cast, To sigh, in mournful requiem-"The summer days are past."
