From the Brantford Courier.

If a new election be resorted to by the Government it will be in order to convince the Province how really strong they are, and to totally disarm the Clear Grit factional Opposition. As appeal to the country would be a perfect triumph to the men in power. Their enemies are disorganized and dispirited. Their leader, George Brown, is compelled to ingloriously flee from Lambton to make way for a moderate: McDougall finds it no go for Waterloo; Hartman's chance is small; Hamilton is safe, and Christie here feels pretty considerably dubious. The union between the Grits and fossil Tories is dissolved; the organs of the party are dying out, and altogether the cause of the Grits is a hopeless one. The Ministry have indeed a fine chance to appeal to the country just ghur-a most brilliant after, we are told.
