Want to be a volunteer?
Sharen's looking for you

Many want the opportunity to get involved in their community but don't know how. Helpmate Information has set up a service called the Richmond Hill Volunteer Bureau where residents can telephone or drop in to find a volunteer job which suits their time commitment, interests and talents. Sharen Smith, volunteer coordinator for the bureau said, "We can match people up where they are most needed." Already there are 50 volunteer jobs listed which are available in the community and Sharen is working on finding more. There are opportunities for senior citizens, men, women and students to work with individuals or groups, children or adults or in a specialized field or general assistant. Volunteers can work as little or as much as they choose and the amount of training received depends on the job. The new Volunteer Bureau acts as a clearing house, said Sharen, and asks anyone who would like to share some time to drop in and see what is available.

Additional parking

Even though Markham Transit is providing bus service to Langstaff GO Transit rail station, GO is installing 50 more parking spaces.

The parking lot has been fully utilized for about a month said Ernie Madden, marketing manager for GO Transit, and was easily expanded as the property is owned by the Ministry of Transportation and Communications.

Volunteer hunting

A new service in the community — acquiring volunteer help for various jobs — has been started in Richmond Hill in conjunction with Helpmate Information. Sharen Smith, front,
