Schools designed before they're approved

Though the provincial government has yet to approve funding for three new schools, the York Region Roman Catholic Separate School Board last week appointed architects to prepare sketch plans of the three new campuses.

Architects will be hired to design two schools in Vaughan — Our Lady of the Rosary in Glen Shields subdivision and St. Francis of Assisi in Pine Valley — and one new school in Markham's Milliken Mills development.

Estimated cost for preparation of sketch plans is $20,000 per school. The Richmond Hill firm of Allen and Sherriff will handle the Glen Shields school and Stafford and Haensli will be contracted to design Pine Valley. Pickering based architect William Saccoccio will draw up plans for the Milliken Mills school.

All three firms have done extensive design work for the school board in the past. Since funding for the new schools hasn't been approved yet board trustees aren't sure when they will be built. The board hopes to begin construction of all three this year.

It takes about 18 months to build an elementary school and trustees feel that by preparing sketch designs now they might cut construction time by up to three months.

Energy Action is looking for willing workers

Energy Action has taken the bull by the horns this week and advertised for a community resource person to help in the development of a community energy conservation program.

Just last week the budget of Energy Action was cut by Finance Committee and council, but Catherine Hunt, the leader of the project said she needs some help so she is going ahead anyway.

Miss Hunt said she needs a person willing to give not fewer than 20 hours each week. The person must be knowledgeable about the community, have good contacts to quickly 'mobilize forces' and a person who will be willing to carry on after the ten month project is finished in June of 1980.
