Spring Mills splits Hill's Council again

Spring Mills Estates Limited is back in the news.

Monday night Spring Mills Estates lawyer Ron Biderman asked Richmond Hill Council members to reaffirm their decision to support the estate residential subdivision proposed for Bayview Avenue below Gormley Sideroad and indicate their satisfaction to a new plan.

The stormy six-year history of this issue includes many official plan amendment approvals and rescinded decisions by Richmond Hill council.

Monday's meeting was characteristic with the issue causing a heated exchange with frayed tempers and out-of-order comments.

Last February council decided to approve the land designation of "estate residential" and the amendment went to the region for approval.

The plan received regional approval, slightly altered, and now goes to the Ontario Municipal Board (OMB).

The OMB rejected the application in January of this year.

Spring Mills Estates is now asking the OMB to reopen the hearings, based on the changed attitude of the region and the municipality.

Council members were split on the decision to support, with some feeling because the proposed subdivision went against the official plan it would cast doubts about the new plan, and consequently, it was better to support the official plan now and consider the subdivision at a later time.

Councillors Mike Burnie and John Birchall were upset because Richmond Hill had not seen the new plan approved by the region, before it went to the OMB.

Councillor Birchall maintained the town had "an obligation to uphold the policy of the official plan."

With obvious indignant resignation, Councillor Al Duffy said, "obviously we don't care about the planning process in the town."

Councillor Lou Wainwright strongly urged the matter be cleared up without further delay and Councillor Gord Rowe felt town planning staff should have studied the new plan when it appeared on regional minutes.

Planning Commissioner, Bill Power defended himself by saying the council had not instructed his department to comment.

Richmond Hill's new official plan, now before the minister, designates this portion of land "rural" and planning committee had recommended to council the town solicitor attend the OMB hearing to defend the official plan.

Council defeated this recommendation on a five-four vote, with the four council members feeling council had voted against the official plan.

The motion which finally did get approval — on a five to four basis — came from Councillor Lou Wainwright and said in view of the resolution passed by council in February the solicitor be asked to support application of Spring Mills Estates before the OMB.

The Ontario Municipal Board hearing on this matter will be held December 14 at 10 a.m. in council chambers.

Handicapped get facilities

York County Board of Education approved plans to include facilities for handicapped children in two new schools in the Markham-Thornhill area.

The new school in the Risebrough subdivision and Willowbrook Public School in Thornhill will both be built with special facilities to accommodate the handicapped children in these areas.

Handicapped children attending Unionville, William C. Berzcy and Parkview Public Schools will attend the new school in Risebrough, and those now attending German Mills, Bayview Fairway, Bayview Glen and Johnsvie Public School will attend Willowbrook Public School.

Ramps for wheelchairs and washroom facilities for the handicapped will be included in the modifications.

Additional funding will be requested from the Ministry of Education for the modifications to accommodate the handicapped students.
