Let them eat Christmas cake it's full of good protein

By ANNE WANSTALL Well might you laugh! But if you can't afford to fill 'em up with solid protein in the kind of unhealthy quantities Canadians have indulged for years, you really can let them eat cake.

Although the poor lady was credited with less noble motives, Marie Antoinette might well have been thinking of the British when she suggested cake as a solution to French starvation problems. Generations of the islanders have literally survived because of a filling dessert that followed a sparse main course.

Look into any British cookbook, and nearly two-thirds of the recipes are about desserts — not all of them heavy, it's true, but usually the filling kind that will push into the empty corners left after the main course.

World War Two was practically won by a nation able to sustain itself on "good puds," and however much one laughs about the quality of British cooking, true devotees of the dessert will inform you that there's nothing finer.

The essence of the matter is to cut back on main course gluttony by eating no more than four ounces (about three thin slices of beef, pork or poultry), include plenty of vegetables, and save a solid dessert that's based on two simple formulas.

One of them really could claim first place as the meat of the meal, because its basis is suet — but who knows where the chopped suet goes after the festive season? A good suet crust would around jam, currants, sliced apples, the juice and rind of a lemon, or candied citrus fruits doesn't find much favor in Canadian kitchens except at Christmas time when everyone happily tucks into the annual pudding.

The other is a simple sponge mixture, where fat and sugar are creamed together, the eggs are beaten in, and other ingredients are added lightly and carefully. The batter is put into a greased basin, covered with waxed paper and probably a cloth, then steamed for about two hours.

Served with a custard, syrup, or even whipped cream, these puddings are the stuff of the Ancient Britons, guaranteed to keep out a winter chill — and help your pocketbook survive inflationary times.

So let's begin with the season for those who didn't think to make their Christmas pudding in time.

The marriage taking place in Holy Trinity Church, Eaton Square, Toronto, Ontario, November 24, 1979.

1 cup brown sugar
1 cup ground suet
1 cup seedless raisins
1 cup currants
1 1/2 cups flour
1 tsp. baking soda
pinch of salt
Mix all ingredients and steam for about four hours. If desired, you can add mixed peel and glazed cherries. Serves eight to 10.

essence
4 to 5 tbsp. hot jam
Add the vanilla essence to the butter, sugar and egg batter before adding the flour. Turn into a basin and steam as before.
Heat the jam, and pour over and around the cooked pudding before serving. Serves six to eight.

1 recipe basic sponge mix
1 cup raisins
grated rind and juice of 1 lemon
Split and press the raisins against the side of the pudding basin. Add the lemon rind to the butter, sugar and egg batter. After you've added the flour, fold in the lemon juice. Steam as before. Serves six to eight.

Keates shines

Richmond Hill Minor Bantams' goalie Bill Keates came up with a fine game against Thornhill despite losing 3-0 as he made numerous outstanding saves.

Thornhill outshot Richmond Hill 31-11 in the game.

Rasheed Saleuddin, the other Hill goaltender, only allowed two goals as the Minor Bantams downed Orillia 8-2 last Friday night in Orillia.

Gino Digioacchino scored the first of his two goals assisted on both by Shawn Gallagher. John Zandonia had one goal with assists to Pat Engel and Dave Abernethy, Paul Joslin and Kevin McInnis then set up Abernethy for a goal.
