Bill for handicapped hits heavy opposition

LEGISLATION ON DISCRIMINATION for handicapped people has run into considerable opposition, and its fate is very uncertain at the present time.

Various groups representing handicapped people have opposed the legislation because it singles them out for special treatment, a form of discrimination.

It has been charged that the government chose to introduce a separate bill because it didn't want to re-open the Human Rights Act. Amending that Act to cover handicapped people would leave the government open to lobbying from other groups, especially the homosexual rights community, which would want a section banning discrimination based on sexual preference.

There is a possibility that amendments covering handicapped people will have to wait to be included with those dealing with mandatory retirement age and pensions, which may result from studies currently under way.

The Minister of Labour stated that it's "only realistic to recognize the legislative process will be protracted".

While Stuart Smith did not dispute the point, he attacked the government for even giving credence to the concept of a natural gas surplus, saying that all Canada's natural gas reserves should be kept for the future. He also questioned the Minister's apparent selective reliance on NEB figures when discussing potential surpluses, one day acknowledging that he did not trust NEB data with respect to hearing surplus figure and exports based on that.

During an emergency debate on home heating oil, he told the Minister that Ontario has been sitting on its hands instead of "converting to natural gas, expanding gas lines into various communities and across various boundaries within the province."

Already in Ontario, 19,650 homes have switched to natural gas this year, compared with 8,500 last year. The forecast for next year in Ontario is 26,500 conversions, but brisk demand has meant that manufacturers of conversion kits "have been unable to meet the demand".

Stuart Smith told the Minister that gas companies are discouraging new conversion requests until the end of January because they are swamped with people trying to convert.

The Minister of Energy has condemned the federal government's decision to approve extensive natural gas exports to the U.S., calling the decision premature and inappropriate.

Canadians could be hurt because domestic natural gas prices will rise as exports deplete our conventional reserves. Such a consequence will force the

POLICE COMPLAINTS BOARD

The Attorney General has called for speedy passage of a bill to establish a 15-member Police Complaints Board to handle citizen complaints against Metro police.

A three year trial period is envisaged, with members of the Board appointed by Cabinet.

Five would have legal training; five would be on the joint recommendation of the Metro Toronto Police Association and the Metro police chief; and five on the recommendation of Metro Council.

It would be headed by a full-time Commissioner appointed by Cabinet.

PILKINGTON GLASS LAY-OFFS

The Minister of Industry has stated that it is not his job or the job of the government to take responsibility for the decision of Pilkington Glass Industries Ltd. to close one of its Scarborough production lines and lay off about 400 people, including about 100 non-unionized staff.

Also affected are 300 union employees who were not recalled when a 16-week strike at the plant ended October 26.

The Minister of Labour was asked to determine whether Pilkington decided to close the line before the strike began in July, but replied that if there was such an allegation by the union or any employees, "then the Ontario Labour Relations Board should hear about it".

We wish you a very Merry Christmas

As you greet this wondrous season we send warm wishes and thanks for the gift of your continued friendship.
