MAN AND HIS WORLD

Introduction

This column will borrow from writings under the "Timber Doodle" by-line with which some readers of the Ottawa Journal may be familiar. The emphasis, though, will be on the Man/Earth interface - those areas where Man comes into conflict with his world to the ultimate detriment of both.

The basic philosophy will be that Man is ultimately dependant upon a healthy earth whose resources are finite and decreasing; and that concerned people must stand up and be heard on the side of Mother Earth.

Here, then, is the first story.

A Place to Grow

Trees, like so many things in nature, are extravagant seed producers. If every seed, from every tree, grew to sapling size the woodlots would be an impenetrable jungle in no time.
