their brains have been at rest for many years. My excuse for ineptitude is that I, as one of the elder statesman, get to sleep in a room by myself. This room was built by one of the seven dwarves because the door is a scant five feet tall. At least once during the week, arising in the early morning darkness, I strike my forehead a resounding crack on this #$$@! door. Thus, frequently I can do no work as my brain is bruised.

Getting a good meal can be a problem in some hunting camps, but not in ours. We have three very good cooks. One once worked in the Harbour Castle (but only on the dessert line), one was a Navy cook and subsequently owned a restaurant in Sioux Lookout (there's a restaurant there?), and the third is self taught. I'm a little worried about this year, though. Our Harbour Castle Chef is sick and won't be there, the wife of our Sioux Lookout Restaurateur has yanked his leash back home, and the self-taught guy says he's sick of cooking. If a person is willing to cook, there is absolutely no danger of criticism. Not one person will request less mustard on the tomatoes, or suggest that there are cooking techniques besides frying. It's just like most volunteer organizations. If you complain, you get the job. The only way out is impeachment, and that takes months. So we shut up and eat.

But in spite of the dirt, noise, discomfort, poor food, itching, and rising in the frigid pre-dawn darkness to sit on a stump for four hours, the hormones are up and I'm anxious to go. I don't know why. It doesn't sound like fun even to me.
