

Morrison's Point Stonewallers Wrap Up Another Year of Rebuilding the Past

The Morrison Point Road Dry Stonewallers were back at it this past year picking up and putting down stones. But in this case, each placement of a stone aligns with a precise knowledge and skill focusing on how to build the iconic stone walls lining Morrison Point Road.

Spokesperson Les Stanfield reported the team worked on three sections of wall this year.

They continue to work on the schoolhouse wall on Keogh's property where they added another 35 feet. The rock was donated by Nancy Bennet and Joe Keogh and Ted Fox added tractor time. The restoration work on the wall on Laura Anthony's property is just about completed, Mr. Stanfield said, with 32 feet added. Rebuilding a 55-foot section of wall on the Margulies/Kirkpatrick property took all year to do. It was the main focus of a Friday morning group.

As always it was a true community effort, Stanfield said, with Paul Creasy assisting with rock sourcing, beverages offered by our host properties and supplemented this year by the Lake on the Mountain Brewing Company.

Plans are underway for next year and the group would welcome new volunteers. Newcomers would receive training in stone walling. For more information, including an extensive collection of photos that track progress over the years, check out <http://morrisonpointstonewall.ca/>.
