Robots - Cont'd from page 5

an army spokesperson says that when dealing with casualties, it is "important to maintain that human touch." A shame he didn't think of that before sending humans to the battlefield.

Excavators deep in the mines of Sudbury are driven by operators on television in Toronto. Why not? If there's a mine collapse no living being will be there. Why Toronto you ask? Well, again, why not? What's the difference between being above ground in Sudbury and above ground in the Centre of the Universe?

So I think we ought to get on the robot bandwagon. Easy for me to say, I'm retired and do no useful work. A robot could easily replace someone like me who does nothing, but who would build one? Who would buy one? Well, maybe my wife if she pined for someone who belches on command and does little else.
