

New Equine Facility in South Marysburgh Aims to Forge Lasting Links Between Humans and Horses

South Marysburgh is now home to a new facility that enables kids...and adults...to learn more about themselves, to improve communication skills, and to gain confidence and self-esteem, while interacting and having fun with horses.

Loving Truth Farm is the fulfillment of a dream that Hollie Graham, a resident of South Bay, has had for years. Her personal experiences with horses fueled the lifelong desire to share the special relationship that can be nurtured between horses and humans.

"It's a passion of mine," Hollie says, remembering a very special evening when she had gone for a walk on the farm to admire the night sky. "It was pitch black when I was returning and then my horse, Marley, met me half way and we walked together back to the barn. It was magical and I wished everyone could experience this bond with a horse."

Since then, the path she has forged has brought her to this new venture of offering a variety of opportunities to learn more about horses, and to learn from horses.

Starting last month, Loving Truth Farm, began to offer program options for individuals and groups, for both children and adults, that include equine assisted learning, a nature school program, riding lessons and vaulting les-
