

Council on Reserve Critical. . . (cont'd):

Chief Coun. Richard Isaac said the council should first study the cost and make inquiries about what grants are available for local police forces.

The reserve is policed by OPP but councillors complain that their bylaws are not enforced and that police response in emergencies is too slow.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

My name is Cathy Porter and I will be going into Grade 13 at Caledonia High School this fall. I was fortunate enough to be chosen from all the Senior Indian students at C.H.S. to represent our school in "Project Jamaica".

"Project Jamaica" is affiliated with the Canadian Crossroads International organization. This is the first year Crossroads has used high school students in its program.

From 21 applications, three high school students were chosen from the Six Nations Reserve. Besides myself, there is Carol Wright from Hagersville Secondary School, and David Henhawk from Brantford Collegiate Institute. The reason why only Indian students were chosen was because Crossroads decided to have a mixture of cultures representing Canada. Other Indian students selected were Wendy Hendrick from the Muncey Reserve and Greg Nadjiwan from the Cape Croker Reserve. Laura Hawkins, Sue Currie, Bruce Phal. Graham Watson and Bob Ebbs from London, Ont., make up the rest of the group.

Prior to coming to Jamaica we had a two-day orientation at Westminster College (University of Western Ontario). Here we were acquainted with the customs and the culture of the Jamaican people.

On Wednesday, July 15th, we took off on an Air Canada jet from Toronto International Airport to start our 5-week stay in Jamaica.

Our destination was Knox College, a secondary school located near the town of Spalding in the Jamaican mountains. Upon arrival we were welcomed by Rev. Lewis Davidson, the principal of the school. He thanked us for coming and wished us the best of luck in our work.

Besides the ten students representing Canadian Crossroads International, there are ten recreation leaders from Centennial College in Toronto, ten black students from the Baggs Academy in Georgia, ten students from Washington, D.C., and two fellows from England. Each one of us has a Jamaican host making about 70 workers in all.
