

Incineration experts article from page 6

Kearns of Kearns International and to provide testimony to Six Nations Elected Council, since they are the ones who are deciding the fate of this deal. "The whole community is going to have to bare the brunt of this thing. The pollution that comes out of this incinerator is going to be a whole community problem. I'm offering to come at no expense to let people hear both sides and let them make a judgment."

John Kearns told Two Row Times in an interview that, "The incinerator is a natural producer of toxins. It releases them into the atmosphere, that's the downside to incineration." However Kearns claims his machine is not an incinerator, but rather a "disintegrator" which renders toxic materials inert. "My machine has been proven beyond a doubt by academic testimony. My ash is 250,000 times cleaner than what they're asking for. I'm allowed 10,000 parts carbon in the ash. This machines delivers 0.04."

Six Nations Elected Council's Negotiation Committee for the waste incinerator have announced a community meeting sometime during the first week of June. They have assured the community they haven't signed anything yet and John Kearns will be at the meeting to answer any questions community members may have. Sitting on the Negotiation Committee for the waste incinerator are Bob Johnson, ex-chief Bill Montour, Lewis Staats, Darryl Hill, Dayle Bomberry and Mike Montour, Director of Public Works.