A TOOTH

"Here, said the Dentist. This is causing the trouble.
 It's a little tooth with a big hollow bubble.
 It's so uncanny as you have seen.
 All your teeth are yellow, this one is green.
 It's giving you pain, I'm quite sure.
 So get in this chair; get up off the floor.
 I'll give you a needle, It'll feel like a bite.
 So open your mouth and hold it there tight.
 Your cheek will get numb but that's not all.
 I'll pull it out and in the sink it will fall.
 You won't feel a thing, you'll never have pain
 And you won't have a toothache ever again."

Said the Patient,
 "It's easy for you to say a thing like that
 For you have no feelings under that fat.
 You're a dentist, and I'm sure you are right
 But if it hurts, I'll put up a fight.
 I'm scared of a needle, but if it don't hurt
 I'll sit right here and let you start work.
 And if it hurts I'll cry and feel dumb,
 So give me three needles to make my jaw numb
 Don't be sloppy get it over with quick,
 'Cause if I see blood, I'm bound to be sick."

A BRANCH LIBRARY

There is an old fellow named Mark,
 Who lives in a tree in the park.
 You can see him each night,
 By his library light,
 Turning over the leaves after dark.

TONGUE TWISTER:

She sawed six slick, sleek, slim,
 slender saplings.
