

Oct 15/94

Native heritage reflected in Robertson's effort

His latest CD, released Oct. 4, Music for The Native Americans, is filled with tracks culled down from the soundtrack to a six-hour documentary to air this fall on WTBS.

Robertson, whose mother was a Mohawk, grew up in an urban setting but spent his summer vacations at Ontario's Six Nations Reserve. Though his heritage never played a big part in his life or music, he's proud to take command of this project.

He started working on this soundtrack nine months ago, and is still applying finishing touches. He collected talented native artists from across North America, including Canada's Kashtin, to perform contemporary music and half the tunes are sung in native languages.

CP Photo

Musician Robbie Robertson recently released a new album entitled Music for The Native Americans.