

Pink Shirt Day Presentation: Be the Change!

By Mari Reeve

OHSWEKEN – On Wednesday, February 25th Six Nations celebrated its 3rd year of participating in Pink Shirt Day. Begun in a Nova Scotia highschool in 2007 as a response to a Grade 9 being bullied for wearing a pink shirt on his first day of school, the wearing of pink shirts has come to stand against all types of bullying.

In Six Nations a group of professionals in community building and healing put together a powerful presentation about bullying and visited grades 4, 5 and 6 at local schools J.C.Hill/Jamieson, Kawenni:io, Lloyd S King, Emily C. General and I.L.Thomas.

Their message was simple and beautiful: Be The Change. That means standing up against bullying, walking away from people trying to gossip, and not engaging in bullying of any kind.

One of the organizers, Danielle VanEvery, Community Educator at Ganohkwasra, acted in all the role-plays for the youth and explained that the theme was about “reinforcing the positive, and bringing kindness back into our community so we can be powerful.”

In total, nine talented individuals within the community put their heads together to devise a half hour presentation for the elementary youth. Lance Logan Keye, Youth Justice Worker at Six Nations Grand River Correctional Services, began the interactive presentation with a Creation Story.

Explaining the struggles between the left handed and right handed twin, hinting that we all may have a bit of both twins inside of us, but that we must choose to be positive, Keye described the tragic birth of the twins, their battles growing up together, and their final battle concerning who should take care of creation.

After the story telling, the rest of the group played out 3 different scenarios, first allowing the situation to play out negatively, and then ‘re-doing’ the scenario, choosing a positive response to the situation instead. The actors included Brittnay Thomas and Barb Rowe from Six Nations Child and Family Services, and Brody Thomas, Brandon Martin, Jami Lee VanEvery, Amber Silver-smith and Dion Jonathan from Ganohkwasra.

The first scenario depicted a bus ride home after school, involving online bullying as kids on the bus used Facebook pictures to make fun of people. The negative scenario showed them insulting people on Facebook while the rest of the group laughed and joined in.

Lance Logan Keye, acting as the narrator, paused the scene, and asked what kindness looks like. The youth replied “Be The Change!”

The positive scenario showed kids praising Facebook pictures, saying how happy and pretty their peers looked, while also noting that we should not talk badly about people when they are not around to defend themselves. There was laughter in the audience and the youth were giving their full attention to the scenario.

The second scenario showed three cousins hanging out at Grandma’s house, while one girl was very distressed because her mother was hospitalized for depression. The first, negative response scenario showed the girls blaming one another and finding fault with their families for the turmoil.

The scene was paused and started again with a completely different, positive response. The cousins talked kindly with one another, explaining that depression is not like a cut, you cannot see blood or a scar so it is hard to know someone is in pain. The cousins did not blame one another or their families but offered an ear to listen and a shoulder to cry on, wishing for the mother to receive the care she needs.

Lastly, the group showed the young audience what bullying can look like in sports. The group was playing Lacrosse and was asked to
