SIX NATIONS

The grand opening of Jukasa Media recording studio and Arbor Records (East) at the crossroads of Sixth Line and Onondaga Road, could be to Six Nations musicians, singers and songwriters what the Iroquois Lacrosse Arena is to developing and exposing local lacrosse talent.

At least that's what studio owner Ken Hill hopes will happen as a result of his new multimillion dollar recording studio.

Hill acknowledges Six Nations and GRE's own Dreamcatcher Fund as being good at helping young athletes with sports endeavors, but noticed not as much

A state-of-the-art recording and production facility located at the crossroads of Sixth Line and Onondaga Road is now open for business. Six Nations Entrepreneur Ken Hill has named his latest venture Jukasa Media using the first two letters from the first names of three of his nieces who were killed in separate tragic car accidents over the past year. Parents of the three young women and other members of the family helped cut the ribbon to officially dedicate the facility to their memory in a gala celebration, Friday night. (Photo by Jim Windle)
