

Informality is working for relationship building

By Jim Windle

SIX NATIONS

Steps are being made toward melting the ice that may have formed between Six Nations and the County of Brant over the past three years since the battle of wills between Six Nations and Caledonia began over a proposed housing development of land claimed by the Crown to have been surrendered, but maintained by Six Nations that it was only let out to lease.

The Six Nations Elected Band Council and the Council for County of Brant have opened informal talks designed to restore a healthy relationship between the two communities.

According to Chief Montour, the talks are good, friendly, and even productive.

"We have been talking about a possible "Green Hub" area between our two communities," said Montour. "In fact we talk a lot about green energy ideas
