Tensions remained low at the Empire Homes Development site on Tuesday afternoon despite the fact that the construction crew had gathered to go back to work. A small delegation from Six Nations reiterated to the crew that there would be no work done on the site. When a construction worker attempted to engage in a conversation with Ruby Montour he was immediately discouraged by other workers. While he was attempting to ask general questions like 'why are you guys here?' a supervisor told him to leave and not to approach anyone again. (Photo by Erin Tully)

Ed English and Gene John engaged in a calm conversation about whether or not work was going to commence on Tuesday or Wednesday of this week. English said that he was under the impression that they could go to work for the days leading up to a scheduled meeting between members of Six Nations and the Empire Homes developers.
