A guest of the Government, who was placed in the local lock-up some time ago, tried to relieve the authorities of the expense of his board last week by cutting his throat and wrists with a jack knife. Drs. McLaren and Thomas were called to his assistance and although the would-be suicide was in bad shape and bled profusely, he is progressing favorably so far. Among other things he endeavored to sever the arteries in his wrists and his actions would lead one to believe that he must be possessed of considerable pluck. It would have been much better though had he directed his energies against the Huns.

Congratulations. We understand the stork left a son at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Ben Croskery last week.

We must mention Mr. Colombo, who was a Hercules of good cheer. Miss Stevens, who has recently returned from Toronto, exhibited what was pronounced to be the finest show of millinery ever seen in this camp.

Attractions at The Empire Theatre

Henri Bernstein has written many good plays. Amongst them all "The Thief" is his supreme success. The starization of this famous play will be shown at the Empire Theatre on Friday and Saturday, April 7th and 8th. The plot may be told in a few words. The heroine, a young woman of weak character but with infinite capacity for love, has centered her affections upon a man of special position. Without beauty or wealth she has no means of attracting his attention, and so, in order to make herself desirable in his eyes, she steals large sums of money from her friends with which she buys the most costly clothes. Her pecculations are discovered and attributed to a young man who, knowing the truth, remains silent to shield her. That young man, however, which first led her astray, has ennobled and strengthened her character, and in the won-derful dramatic climax she conquers her guilt.

"The Nature Man" is the five-reel serial Broadway feature, which will be shown at the Empire Theatre on Friday and Saturday next. It is the most instructive and most fascinating novelty of the season. "The Nature Man" shows a big game trapper and soldier, went into the wilds of the Sierra Nevada mountains in California, and again the trackless Maine woods, without money, without money, even as a new born babe, and fought for an existence, incidentally winning a bet of several thousand dollars. "The Nature Man" leaves civilization, stripped of everything except his brains. He makes a fire from two sticks which he rubs together until friction creates a flame; he clothes himself with the skins of animals he kills before the camera lens; he builds his own shelter hut, canoe, traps and bows and arrows, and comes out of the forest at the end of six months with enough skins to provide him with a ear's living expenses in civilization.

"The Nature Man" is a film extraordinary. Its five reels are jammed with the primitive Martin Eden adventure. The trapper fights a hand-to-hand battle with a bear in a tree—a stupendously thrilling spectacle—and he strangles the bear to death. He traps a savage mountain lion and actually kills it before the camera; he rolls on the ground in a snarling, snapping fight with wildcats and panthers; he kills poisonous rattlers and deadly copperheads in primitive fashion, and meets other wild beasts of the virgin forest in hair-raising fights. "The Nature Man" is a stocky scrapper of a primitive type. He loves to rough it, to match his brawn and brains against the beasts of the wilds, and though his body is covered with gashes and rips from innumerable claws and fangs, he delights in the scars. "It feels good to get a rip," says the Nature Man, "and when I get mine, I take the savage, inexpressible delight in fastening my iron fingers around the throat of the animal that has injured me and slowly strangling it to death. The tougher they are the better I like to tackle them. Mountain lions and bears are the gamest and scippiest. They die hard."

"The Nature Man" battles with the beast and his struggle to maintain himself, unarmed with civilized weapon or implement, in the pathless forest, comprises one of the most thrilling features which has ever been thrown upon the screen.
