WELSH TAKES FEW RISKS WITH HIS BOXING TITLE.

Possibly no boxer except Abe Attell has had so many "roastings" by writers as Fred Welsh. Attell, like the light-weight champion, was content to go along meeting opponents in no-decision contests, and just "shading" them or being "shaded," while taking as few risks as possible of damage to himself.

It was very satisfactory to Abe, who was absolutely impervious to all the jibes of pressmen and public, for despite all the biting criticism, people still went on paying their money to see the then featherweight champion—not so much to be witted by his wonderful skill, one suspects, as in the hope of seeing some young, strong boy hand one over that would put the title-holder down for the count.

And that idea, there is no doubt, is in the minds of those who continue to make the no-decision program of champion Fred Welsh a paying one.

His time has got to come if only he remains in the game long enough, and the hungry public will not stay away from his matches for fear of not being "in at the death" when his down fall takes place.

It's a curious phase of the boxing game. There is unbounded adulation and applause for a champion in the first flush of victory, but the public is as fickle as an April day, and soon the call comes for a new champion and a new excuse for hero-worship.

The old-time boxer, Jack Skelly, who now contributes boxing notes to the "Yonkers Herald," is one of the few writers who can find something kind to say of Fred Welsh, and in a recent article he deals with the light-weight situation very tritely. "There is," he says, "no class in the game to-day which has so many clever, scientific, hustling contenders as the light-weight division, all battling for the one object—the world's title—now held by Freddie Welsh, the very clever, but ring-fagged champion. Probably no one more than Freddie realizes his days as a king of his class are numbered, and that he will soon have to retire or suffer the humiliation of defeat from the hands of some of the half-dozen or more of the worthy, logical contenders now trailing him.

"We must all concede that Freddie Welsh is a really game, scientific champion. He is, in fact, a master of the manly art, who, by his cleverness alone, has weathered many a hard battle and side-stepped many a wicked haymaker. Freddie has been milling within the ropes for eleven years, and won his title from Willie Ritchie, in London, Eng., on points alone, two years ago, when his physical prowess was considerably on the decline. As Fred Keats of the 'Sun' writes: 'Here is a championship to be had by any one of a half dozen contenders, provided he pays the price demanded by Welsh for a match. It is taken for granted that beating him is a mere formality. The only problem is to meet his terms.'

"At the worst, these can hardly be more than $25,000, the sum his backers paid Ritchie. It proved to be a very profitable venture for Welsh, although at the time he was a veteran whose ring career had lasted longer than the average. If he could afford to take such a chance at his age, why cannot Leonard or Dundee or White or Hammer follow his example?"

"When Jess Willard got the opportunity to capture the world's heavy-weight championship, he jumped at the chance. Jess not only took great pugilistic chances but a financial one as well. Johnson got some thirty thousand or more for his end, win, lose, or draw. And the white man found himself in debt to the amount of possibly ten thousand for training and other expenses, after his great victory. But Willard had the big title in his grasp and has since made quite a big fortune, and probably in another year will be able to retire undefeated with half a million dollars banked away."

An old farmer visited his married daughter, who had tidies on the backs of her chairs. As he was sitting by the window he spied the minister approaching the front door. As his daughter went to answer the door, her father, not being accustomed to such finery, snatched all the tidies off the chairs and threw them under the table. After the minister had gone away, he said to her: "Aye, Jean, lass; ye've to thank me for no' bein' blank affrontit this day. See how I got yer washin' oot o' the way afore the minister cam' in."

Socialists Say War Itself is The Crime

Swiss Socialist newspapers reproduce the text of a manifesto which is being distributed throughout the German Empire, in spite of the authorities, by a section of the Socialist party, which, led by Herr Hanse and Herr Ledebous, is opposing the war. The broad sheet bears the title "Hunger," and following are some of the chief paragraphs:

"In Leipzig, Charlottenburg, Brunswick, Magdeburg, Coblenz, Osnabruck and many other places there are noisy gatherings of hungry people in front of the provision shops. The only reply the Government has to the hungry cry of the masses is martial law, the police sabre, and military patrols.

The Responsibility.

Dr. Von Bethmann-Hollweg accuses England of the crime of making Germany hungry, and those whose interest it is to continue war repeat it after him. The German Government must know, however, that this would necessarily happen; that a war against Russia, France and England must lead to the isolation of Germany and that it has always been the endeavor of belligerents to cut off the enemy's supplies. It is the war that is the crime; the starvation plan is only a consequence of this crime."

The manifesto concludes with an appeal to the men and women of the working classes to raise their voices against the continuance of the war.

IF I knew you and you knew me,
'Tis seldom we would disagree;
But never having yet clasped hands,
Both often fail to understand.
That each intends to do what's right,
And treat each other "honor bright"
How little to complain there'd be,
If I knew you and you knew me.

WHEN 'ERE we slip you by mistake,
Or in your bill some error make;
From irritation you'd be free,
If I knew you and you knew me.
Or when the cheque don't come on time,
And Customers send us hazy a line
We'd wait without anxiety,
If I knew you and you knew me.
