THE ARMY SERVICE CORPS

Did you ever stop to consider what branch of the service looks after the feeding of the troops in the field and what a great task it is in the present war? The Army Service Corps do this work and also look after the transportation of ammunition to the firing line.

Few people know just what duties are performed by this corps. Let us consider how the supplies and ammunition are brought up to the troops in the trenches. In the first place we have railways working backward and forward from the coast and from the end of the railways motor trucks and lorries carrying the supplies to within about ten miles of the front.

The motor lorries and trucks transfer their loads to the horse transport which unit carries them the remainder of the journey over the shell torn roads which are impossible for trucks to traverse.

An army cannot fight without food, and it is essential that there are no faults in the system of getting food to the soldiers.

From the above one can easily estimate the great importance of the work done by the Army Service Corps.

The A.S.C. are short of men and need drivers for mechanical and horse transport, also bakers, butchers, saddlers, carpenters, electricians, turners, fitters, locksmiths, etc.

This service offers a man a chance to enlist in the capacity of his trade and come more proficient in the same which will be a great benefit to him after the war.

Any information regarding this service may be obtained from Lieut. C. W. Ireson, C.A.S.C., Hotel Goldfields, Timmins.

To such an extent has Argentine's frozen hare industry developed that the Government has been asked to lend assistance in respect of obtaining a greater supply, and the announcement is made that the principal difficulty is the lack of trappers. Great Britain alone imports over fifty million pounds of frozen rabbits annually.

One of the most beautiful of the early lighthouses, and the first tower in a seaswept position, was Cordouan light, on the coast of France, at the entrance of the River Gironde. It was built in 1611, and, although it has been remodelled, some of the original structure is still there, more than 200 feet high.
