"Secure The Help of Your Local Paper"

"Secure the help of the local papers and talk this up in your advt." That is the advice of The Dry Goods Review to merchants in the matter of saving waste in delivery and approvals. The advice is good,—not only for this particular question now agitating merchants, but it is good for all questions and matters that affect merchants and the public.

"Secure the help of the local papers and talk this up in your advt." That, of course, has apt reference to the saving that may be made in regard to the present wasteful methods of delivery. Customers could do away with much extra expense if they would assist more if the delivery of parcels. We need wise economy at this time. By carrying home all small purchases, by a little planning in purchasing, so as not to be giving a half-a-dozen different orders for delivery at different times when one order would answer, the customers could reduce the cost of doing business and thus strike another blow at the high cost of living. Delivery service costs money, and of course it is the public in the end that pays. The public would no doubt gladly make the saving if they were sure it would be a saving to them. They have the idea, however, that with the non-advertising merchants, it would be a case of the storekeepers "saving" here just as they think they "save" by not advertising. The public feel doubtful about those business men who are afraid to advertise. And who can blame the public.

"Secure the help of the local papers and talk this up in your advt." That is good advice for Prices, Service, and the other matters that mutually affect the merchants and the public.

There are businesses that actually

CAN NOT AFFORD to advertise. If they published the truth about their prices, service, etc., it would injure rather than help their little trade. But, if you are in the other class, Mr. Merchant,—the class that is giving honest service and fair value, then "Secure the help of your local paper and talk these things up in your advt."

The Advance will be pleased to talk over the matter of advertising with you, and show you where it will profit both you and the public to "Secure the help of your local paper and talk this up in your advt."
