SEEING COPS IS A WORSE FORM THAN SEEING SNAKES

Monday evening two young men and a young woman descended from a taxi at the side of the Prince of Wales Hotel. None of the three were very deliriously sober, and the young woman, perhaps, the least of the three. Constable Perault was standing on the corner and the three saw him and proceeded quietly down Third Avenue. The constable thought they might need watching, and he slipped down the lane and was standing at the Imperial Bank corner as they came by. After they passed the officer again made hurried use of some lanes and was standing at the Lady Laurier corner for them to pass.
They were doing splendidly, but the constable thought he would see them just a little farther homeward, so he used the laneways once more, and stood calmly near the rink as the two went by. This was too much for one of the young men. After they had passed the corner, this one young man stopped and addressed his companion and the world in general.
"For the love of mike," he asked excitedly, "how many police have they in this town. Sure, there's a cop on every doggone corner!"

Speaking of the opening match in the N.O.H.A. Senior series, The New Liskeard Speaker says:—"Every boy on the Liskeard team gave his best.
This is true also of the visitors, and the game would have been enjoyed by the spectators no matter which side won." That's the right type of hockey, and if that kind is played throughout the season, hockey will be popular in this man's country this year.
