SUDBURY MAYOR AND STAR REPORTER IN POLICE COURT

Last week, James Y. Nicol, a reporter on The Sudbury Star, in seeking information on municipal affairs got into a crash with the mayor of the town on the matter. The mayor considered the reporter altogether too inquisitive and ordered the newspaperman from the municipal building. He refused to go, and the chief of police being sent for, gave it as his opinion that the mayor could not forbid the reporter access to the building. In the squabble that developed between the mayor and the newspaperman, Mayor Bibby claimed that the reporter used abusive language to him and a charge was laid charging Nicol with loitering in a public place and acting in an improper way, or words to that effect. On the stand the reporter admitted calling the mayor a blank sort of a liar, but said this occurred only after Mayor Bibby had called the newspaperman a liar, without the blank. After hearing the evidence the magistrate remanded the case for judgment. On giving out his judgment in the case Magistrate McKessock dismissed the charge laid by Mayor Bibby. The magistrate held that the reporter was clearly within his rights and was performing his duty both, during the council meeting and after adjournment of council when the flare-up occurred.
