Toronto Mail and Empire:—A cartoon by Darling in the New York Herald-Tribune represents President Coolidge, as doctor or midwife, presenting twins to Congress. One is labeled Kellogg's pact for outlawing war, the other is the $280,000,000 for building more American battle cruisers. As the cartoonist remarks, they do not look much alike, and we are tempted to say that the former looks less like Uncle Sam than the latter.

Simcoe Reformer:—Those who have been inclined to scoff at the suggestion that Canadians take pride in King and Empire will have had their eyes opened during the illness of King George. "How is the King today?" and similar questions expressing anxiety for his welfare have been heard on all sides. Bulletins recording his progress have filled the most conspicuous space of all daily newspapers. Patriotism and loyalty may slumber at times, but they are qualities inherent in the breast of every true Canadian. Long live the King!
