PLANNING DEVELOPMENT AT BINGHAM PROPERTY

Diamond Drilling Programme to be Carried Out at Promising Promising Property Formerly Known as the "Irish Vet," Near Three Nations

It is always good news to note the exploration or development of new properties of promise in an established mining camp so there will be very general interest in the announcement that the Bingham Mining Company, Limited, intend to carry out this winter an extensive diamond drilling campaign to prove up their property, a half mile south of Three Nations. This property formerly known as the "Irish Vet," was probably the first veteran claim to be decided in this part of the country. Mr. H. A. Bingham, of Orillia, the president and chief shareholder of the company, was the original owner of the property. There are four claims, 100 acres, in the property, and the location and geology are the very best. The formation is of quartzite and there is a series of quartz veins running from east to west, dipping to the southeast at an angle of 45 degrees. The property has a very large body of well-mineralized quartz rock and in every way seems to hold out promise of developing into a good mining proposition. Work carried on so far shows improved mineralization as depth is reached.

Some work has been carried on recently with very encouraging results. There are three test pits on the property, one of them down six or seven feet. Blasting work done in the past few weeks secured samples of ore that warrant a diamond drilling campaign to indicate the probabilities at depth. Financing is now being completed for this diamond drilling to be done this winter, and those who have visited the property are very hopeful that the drilling will show the claims as especially good. Work on the Three Nations indicated that the veins on that property were dipping into the Bingham. The Bingham Mining Co., Ltd., have the services as consulting engineer of one of the most experienced mining men in the camp, and his opinion favours a diamond drilling campaign to prove up the property. Louis Whitman, the well-known mining engineer, has expressed the opinion that the chances are very favourable on the property if it is developed along conservative lines. He says there are chances of running into very high-grade ore, which, if encountered, should be reserved to carry mill runs. "I know your ground," he told the Bingham Co. last year, "and I think it will prove up commercial ore of more than the ordinary grade if explored to depth." John S. Bray, M.E., and H. P. Langley are two other mining men who have given very encouraging forecasts in regard to the Bingham property. "It is wonderfully situated as to the correct formation in the gold belt and has wonderful possibilities of becoming a good mine," was the statement some time ago of Mr. Bray. Mr. Langley has pointed out that the Bingham Mines is wholly within the Porcupine gold belt and according to the surface showings the prospects are much in its favour.

According there will be very special interest in the diamond drilling campaign planned for this winter at the Bingham property and work will be watched closely by all concerned in the further development of the rich Porcupine gold area.

More Letters Without the Necessary Names

Literally scores of times in the past few years The Advance has called attention to the fact that no responsible newspaper will pay any attention to any letter that does not contain the name of the writer. Items of news sent in by mail are thrown in the waste paper basket if the name of the sender is omitted. The name of the writer of each and every communication is desired by the newspaper, not for publication, but as an evidence of good faith and so that someone may be held as responsible for the item. Letters that are not signed by the writer, and items that are not accompanied by the necessary names of the senders are simply thrown into the waste paper basket. Any other action would be absurd on the part of the newspaper. In general newspapers use the public well, and any man who for any fair reason does not wish his name published in connection with any information or news is always accommodated by the newspaper in this matter. In the most of cases where news items are sent in the newspaper would not think of publishing the name of its informant. When anyone interested or who imagines they are interested, applies for information as to who gave the information for such or such an item of news, the answer invariably is that such information is not given out. At the same time newspapers have found it imperative that they should know the source of all news received and for this reason a hard and fast rule has been adopted that all communications must be signed. The Advance has repeatedly mentioned this fact but some people persist in sending in items without the source being indicated. It is useless to do this, as the items positively will not be used no matter how innocent they may appear. There is no sense or reason in withholding name and address when sending in such items. The names are always treated confidentially. Within the past two or three weeks The Advance has received three of these anonymous communications. They rest in the waste paper
