Young Men's Class at Church Service

Striking Addresses: at United Church on Sunday Evening Give Young Men's Attitude to the Church of the Present Day.

The evening service on Sunday at the Timmins United Church was in charge of the young men's class of the church and the addresses of the evening and the whole service were illuminating in presenting the attitude of the young men to religion, being of special general interest at the moment when there is so much public discussion of young men and religion in regard to university and other matters.

On Sunday evening Ray Wallingford outlined the Tuxis programme, effectively presenting the aims and purposes of this group of young men, what they were accomplishing and what they were striving to do in the way of building better citizenship and interesting youth in the better things of life and progress.

The address by Garth Teeple on what he believed in religion, and why, was an arresting one and gave the older people present much to think about. He referred first to the young men's class conducted by Mr. V. Woodbury for the past seven years, and then proceeded to show how boys thought for themselves on questions of religion and sometimes found the precepts they heard clashing with the examples they were set. Boys, he pointed out, were often misunderstood, and there were many faulty methods of teaching that necessarily did not bring the best of results. He referred to the natural love for heroes and showed that a common method used too often left on the boy's mind a wrong conception of Jesus. He depicted by the quoting of incidents and examples the facts that the Saviour was the bravest and most brilliant of the outstanding figures in history, with a genius for organization that had no parallel and with all the other qualities of heart and mind that would make supreme appeal to youth. He showed that logic and reason urged young men to faith in religion and that science rightly understood buttressed this faith. He touched on what the young men were doing to-day for the church and what the church was doing for youth. "Some day," he concluded, "we may realize that the one most certain truth about religion is its indispensable gift to rich and radiant living."

Others taking part in the service were Francis Woodbury and Leonard McFadden. There were eleven young men on the platform. The ushers for the evening were:—Garth Porter, Bill Dunn, Geo. Wallingford, T. Goodman.

The new chief of police, H. Jones, of Welland, Ont., is expected to take up his new duties here on Tuesday next, March 17th.
