Cause of Stomach Gas

Dr. Carl found that poisons in the UPPER bowel cause stomach gas. His simple remedy Adlerika washes out the upper bowel, bringing out all gas. The Goldfield Drug Store.

Shocks and Jolts in Commercial League

Gambles Find Power Juice Less Palatable than Orange Juice. The T. & N. O. Takes The Advance for a Ride. Wouldn't that Jolt You?

In the Commercial bowling league last Friday the Power boys gave Gambles a shock and jolted them for a couple of points. The big shot of the Power boys was Bill McHugh. He wandered out of the office and ran into a couple of live wires carrying 716 volts. Teddy Towers had some hard luck in the second game getting 15 in the first square and then seven strikes only to blow his last two frames for a total of 303. Gambles pulled up in the last game but were six pins shy to get the extra point on the total. All right, Henry! nobody will be carrying the rabbit's foot tomorrow. By the way that's a good demonstration as to how they pray in the near East even to kissing the floor but you forgot two things: the carpet to kneel on, and to call to Allah! Pete Nicholson found the timber in the last game by running up a score of 351. Where did you get the glasses, Pete?

Then the T. & N. O. took The Advance for a ride by locking them up in the caboose and kept them there until they got the four points they were after. They had a hard time to hold them in the second game when only three pins separated the two teams. Charlie is still slipping; he missed the honour roll again. The printer's devil came out for The Advance for the first time this season and he made the rest of the boys look like novices at the game. He was the only one on both teams to make the honour roll.

Tomorrow night will again see a real battle, for the T. & N. O. meet Gambles and both are a tie on points. Gambles, with the help of Pete's glasses, intend to have sweet revenge for making them work overtime the last time they met. The Power meet The Advance. As these two teams have practically no chance in the first half it's a case of who will have the cellar position, and there is snow on the ground.

New Settlers in the Matheson District

Ten St. Catharines Men Have Built Homes Near Matheson and Have Brought Their Families to the North to Reside.

There is very general interest in the North in the experiment being carried out under the joint auspices of the Dominion and provincial governments for the homesteading of out-of-work men upon the lands in the North. There is a general feeling here among those who have studied the question that the best results would be possible from a system whereby land would be cleared first and buildings erected so that the settlers would have first-class chance to succeed, but this general feeling does not imply that all do not take pleasure in learning of any degree of success won by the plan that is being put into force. What all in the North are concerned with is the success of any plan of settlement that may be adopted. That is why it has been urged that land-clearing be undertaken on an extended scale as a measure of relieving unemployment and to give a fair chance to the settlers. Without a reasonable amount of land cleared they will not have a fair chance. "Have eight or more acres cleared and have buildings up ready for use and the homesteaders will have a good chance to succeed," is the idea that many hold. They think that the chances of success without eight or ten acres cleared is poor indeed. It is pleasing to note that something along the lines suggested has been accomplished by some of the settlers. A despatch last week from Matheson, appearing in several of the daily newspapers, refers to a settlement near Matheson, as follows:—

"There's a cosy little settlement away back in the bush here, where 10 families from St. Catharines have established themselves anew. Unable to get work, 10 husbands and fathers obtained homesteads in the clay belt, built their own houses, and a few days ago welcomed their wives and families who had come from Southern Ontario to rejoin them. There are 20 adults and 30 children in the new settlement, and homes were waiting the arrival of the respective families.

"Six homes were fully completed of log construction, and four were of frame construction, the average size being 18 feet by 22. Only one of the houses was not entirely finished by the time the families arrived. All the furniture was brought from St. Catharines, delivered to the end of the existing gravel roads by truck and then hauled by tractors and logging sleighs to the houses.

"Residents of this village helped greatly in assisting the settlers. Automobiles were provided to take the party from the railway station to their homes, and a truck carried the baggage, dogs, cats, ducks and chickens. Special precautions were taken to keep the various members of the truck-load apart.

"Some of the men pioneers had all their winter's wood cut, while others who had managed to assist local settlers in return had gardens ploughed for the spring."

Russian's View on Affairs in Russia

Shows how Reports of Short-time Visitors Confuse the Issue. A Summary of Conditions as They Really Are.

Probably the vast majority of people in Canada are a little doubtful as to what is really happening in Russia and the progress, if any, made by Soviet plans. It is surely unfortunate in view of this that some people should be disposed to credit openly selfish viewpoints in preference to the words of those who hold the respect of British people. There are some people who seem to feel that whatever is British is sure to be less worthy than something foreign. Surely, it is unfortunate that this is so, especially in view of the record of the British Empire, a record of progress and good intention. However, there are some who are honestly anxious to know the truth about Russia and who seek to be impartial and without prejudice against either their own country or Russia. The reports given out have certainly been confusing to these people, and because the following article by a Russian well acquainted with conditions seems to throw real light on the situation it is given here with:—

(From an article, "Russian Revolution Enters Sixteenth Year," by Nicholas Ignatieff in Toronto Saturday Night).

The most confusing element in the view of Russia abroad is supplied by short-term visitors who, however, well-intended, become absorbed by official propaganda served up largely by interpreter propagandists. Thus while accounts of the progress still being made in new Soviet plants are current, the Soviet press is attacking the management of these same factories for conditions verging on complete breakdown and the resident correspondents are transmitting official figures showing decline in production. While these visitors tell us of shop control by workers and advanced labour legislation, official decrees of the Soviet Government have long since done away with workers' interference in the running of plants and re-introduced a degree of discipline which would not be tolerated in capitalist countries. Even Article 129 of the labour code, theoretically protecting women and young people in industry, has been in practice abrogated, and women are now working with men underground in the Donetz coal mines. While we hear hymns of praise chanted to the humane Soviet penal reforms, men and women are being officially executed for theft, because shortage of food and the elemental necessities has led to an unprecedented crime wave. While educationists still laud the new educational system in Soviet Russia which has changed completely the school curriculum, allowing the young people more freedom and encouraging their participation in running the schools, official Government decrees have restored the old precepts of education—formal curriculum, examinations, and discipline. Thus Walter Duranty reports from Moscow: "The teaching staffs have received authority to end student interference. Entrance and annual examinations have been ordered with rigid examinations for diplomas." The Bolsheviks admit the failure of their "new" education.

All along the line the interests of the people, and even experiments in social reform, were sacrificed to industrialization. Industrial construction stands out as the most striking single achievement of the Soviet Regime. Thus, the communists committed the very crime of which they accuse the capitalists in their propaganda among the workers abroad—they made men subservient to machines.

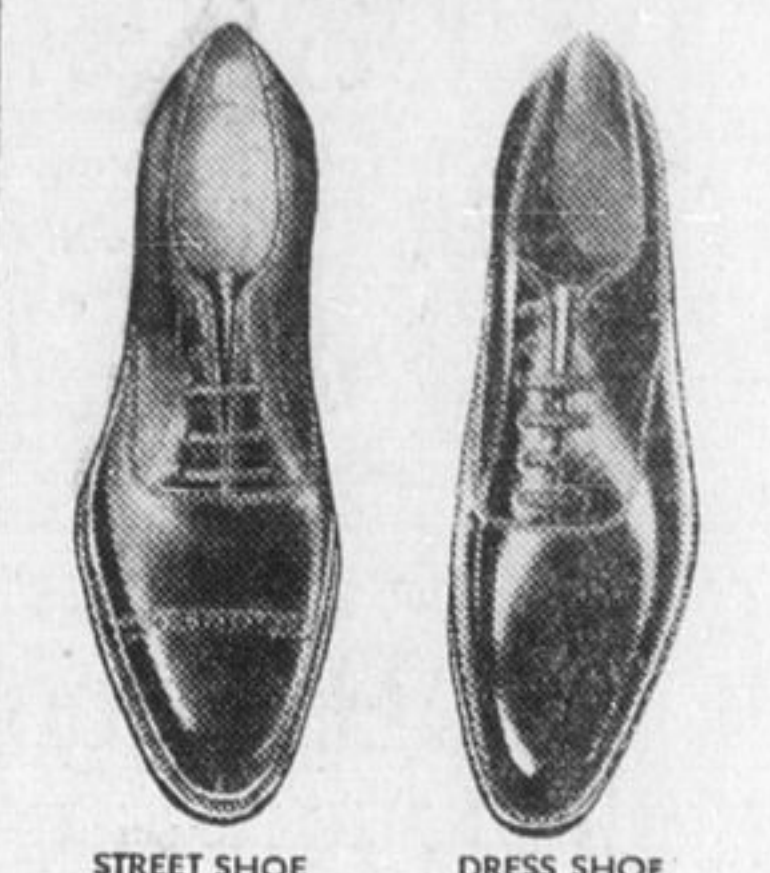

At the end of fifteen years Russia is further from Socialism, that is from the workers' democracy, than she was when the proletariat seized the factories and the peasants the land. Russia is saddled by State Monopoly and is facing famine and bankruptcy. Stalin's policy has failed. Trotsky may well be jubilant. He foretold this failure.

TROUBLE OVER GOODS SEIZED BY COBALT TAX COLLECTOR

When Charles Otton, formerly a barber in Cobalt, quit that town recently to open up in Rouyn, he set in motion a train of events whose finish is likely to be disposed of at the sittings of Judge Hayward's Division Court sittings at Haileybury on Friday of this week. P. J. Martin of the Silver town, claims to have purchased from Otton some articles of furniture and other goods, and was moving them out when Alonzo Fortin, tax collector, appeared and seized some of the stuff to satisfy arrears of taxes alleged to have been owed by Otton. In due course, an auction sale was held and the proceeds applied against the debt owing the municipality according to Fortin. Now, Martin has entered action against the town for illegal seizure, and is claiming $95.15 from the corporation, which has instructed George Mitchell, K.C., to defend the case.
