Trans-Canada Road to be Built Some Day

Premier Bennett Refers to its Completion in the Days to Come. Stresses Need for Recalling the Days of Pioneering

"The greatest service a state can render unto a man is to teach him to take care of himself," Simply and sincerely, Premier R. B. Bennett last week at Toronto told more than 1,000 members of the Ontario Good Roads Association they must recall the days of the pioneers and must struggle against adversity.

"Your father's father and mother's mother d.d not ask the Government to provide them with relief, with the necessities of life," he said. "Even though we must make sacrifices, let us realize, we have a faith that is dauntless; the evidence of things not seen; a faith in things hoped for that will cheer us and carry us through the years," he declared.

Mr. Bennett spoke briefly, but in a few minutes he had carried his hearers down through the ages and outlined the developments railways and highways had brought about.

It was a far cry, he pointed out, from the Appian way of the Romans and the Great North Road of England, to the present transportation systems but all had played their part in the history of a nation.

"When I see these roads, through my mind's eye passes the history of mankind," he said. "So roads have played so great a part."

Despite increased transportation methods, airplanes, railways, trucks and others, there would always be need for the ordinary road, by which people were enabled to meet each other. Some day, he said, the trans-Canada highway, of which each province has assumed a share, would be linked from Pacific to Atlantic coast.

Criticism had been heard regarding the amount of money spent on the transportation systems, he said. "But don't blame the Government. The people to blame are the people you see in your looking-glass in the morning."
