NORTH COCHRANE ENGINEER TRANSFERRED TO KENORA

People of this district who have had occasion to visit Cochrane and the West by car will join with North Cochrane people in regretting the transfer of C. Tackaberry, district engineer of the Northern Development Dept., from Cochrane to Kenora. People here do not notice the roads in the Cochrane North area so much as they did years ago, the roads in this section being so greatly improved under the present engineer, but there was a time when the good work of Mr. Tackaberry in the North was always being quoted to prove that the roads here should be better. There is no doubt but that the talents and faithfulness of Mr. Tackaberry have been of great service to the North in providing specially good roads, despite all difficulties. It is no wonder that strenuous effort has been made recently to have the government leave Mr. Tackaberry at Cochrane. The Canadian Legion wired Hon. Mr. Finlayson asking that Tackaberry remain, but received the reply:—"Tackaberry transferred. Promotion for a deserving officer. Department will take care of your district." Other Cochrane interests sought to retain Mr. Tackaberry for that section of the North and in doing so showed no more than a proper appreciation for a first-class officer and engineer.

W. B. Hutchinson, who has been assistant engineer, under Mr. Tackaberry, and whose headquarters were at Kapuskasing, has been transferred to Cochrane and will take over Mr. Tackaberry's duties. Friends from Cochrane, Kapuskasing and other sections of the district, tendered Mr. Tackaberry a farewell party last week previous to his transference to Kenora as resident engineer there for the Northern Development Dept.

Co-operative Plans of Forestry Needed

Forestry Research Behind Other Research Efforts in Canada, According to Dean C. D. Howe.

Forestry research in Canada has been drifting without a clearly discerned goal, without organization and without a unified driving force, Dr. C. D. Howe, dean of the faculty of forestry of the University of Toronto, charged in a paper presented to the Pacific Science Congress held recently in Vancouver. It was, he said, far behind other research efforts in Canada and "unless the situation is improved soon, we shall be hopelessly in the rear."

Dean Howe recognized the present times were difficult for expansions of research activity but declared the need was never greater. The public was in receptive mood for constructive action in laying more solid foundations for all business activity, and this should apply to what, in normal times, was Canada's second largest wealth-producing business.

The public, he said, were not sufficiently informed of the necessity of keeping research in forest industries going, although they well appreciated its necessity for agriculture. Every forester, he urged, should be a crusader with research as the keystone of his profession. When the public were convinced of its necessity, the means for carrying it on would be forthcoming.

Dean Howe spoke of lack of co-operation among the forest research organizations of Canada. In normal times eight governmental organizations, four forestry schools, four pulp and paper companies, and two associations, eighteen organizations in all, carried on some kind of research work in the forest. Even within the organizations themselves Dean Howe said, there had been an apparent lack of co-ordination and in too many cases each problem seemed to be an end in itself, with the result that forest literature was full of broken threads.

Problems Closely Related

"We will never advance forestry very far by the solution of individual and unrelated problems," he said. "The solution of each problem should be only one step towards the final goal of some finite silviculture practice such as successful regeneration after cutting or the highest yield per acre on a given site. One problem, or a series of problems closely correlated to a definite goal is worth more than 50 unrelated problems carried on as though each were of equal importance."

Just how the Canadian forests would eventually be handled was, in the circumstances, a matter of doubt, but Dean Howe said, "there is no doubt in the minds of foresters as to how they should be handled. They believe our forest lands should be so treated that they will always remain in a productive condition in terms of the commercially valuable woods. To this end forest treatment should develop along three lines: (1) our forests should be felled in such a manner that, wherever possible, natural regeneration of the desired species in the desired quantity will follow as a direct result of the logging operations; (2) they eventually should be handled so that their yield will be increased in quantity and improved in quality and (3) large areas having been depleted of their commercial growing stock will need to be reforested by planting."

Investigation is Necessary

Scientific investigation of Canada's timber resources with a view of their preservation and replenishment is a prime necessity, E. H. Finlayson, director of forestry, Department of the Interior, Ottawa, said. The development and application of methods of forest culture and timber utilization which will assure permanency in wood supplies were matters of vital concern not only to governments but to industry at large, Mr. Finlayson said.

Widespread destruction of the Canadian forests had resulted from the belief that this country had a superabundance of timber, coupled with an equally erroneous belief that if timber were removed practically all forest land could be put to agricultural use. This had brought about an unprofitable denudation of forests.

The expansion of the timber industry, coupled with extensive fires had so reduced the timber content and altered the composition of large areas of forests that many had been rendered completely unproductive and would remain so for many decades, if not centuries.

Mr. Finlayson explained how the rapid advance in the use of scientific machinery for processing forest products had accelerated stripping these areas with little compensation in the way of reforestation.

It is understood that Ernie Weagle, who won a prize in the Irish Sweepstakes for the Derby, has received his prize, the amount being between $6,000 and $7,000.00. It is further understood that Mr. Weagle leaves on Monday for a visit to the United States, taking a holiday with the prize.

E. Pritchard has returned from a visit to California.

Mr. and Mrs. T. W. Kennedy, of Toronto, were visitors to Timmins friends this week.

Accidents Reported at Conklin's Shows Last Week

Two accidents are reported as having occurred last week at the Conklin Shows here under the auspices of the Legion. In the one case a young lady tripped on a tent peg and in the fall broke her ankle. The other case reported is that of Mrs. Jos. Harding, who is said to have suffered a fracture of the spine. She was riding on the Lindy Loop, and it is thought that she fell back against the seat hitting her back in such a way that a fracture resulted. It is understood also that some of the main nerves in the back were injured, and that Mrs. Harding will be laid up and helpless for some time as a result of the painful accident.

Daughter of Tolstoi on Conditions in Russia Now

Windsor Star—Apoligists for modern Russia are fond of coming back at you with: "Anyway things are not as bad as in the days of the Czar." An "oh-yeah" to that is furnished by Alexandra L. Tolstoi, daughter of Leo Tolstoi.

Writing in the last issue of Freedom, which describes itself as a monthly journal of anarchist news and opinion, the Russian woman says:

"I feel that I must raise my voice against such villainous barbarity, the more so because I have worked with the Bolshevik Government and have witnessed such terror developing—Millions were banished, died in prisons and concentration camps in Northern Russia. Thousands have been shot on the spot. The Bolsheviks started with their class enemies, the religious, priests, scientists, professors, and now it is the workers and peasants and again the world remains silent."

Miss Tolstoi, remember, isn't enjoying the comparatively safe haven of the bandstand in Lanspary Park. She's right on the spot.

"For fifteen years," she continues, "the people have been suffering hunger and cold. They are robbed; their bread and other products of their own labour are taken away and exported to other countries, to acquire money not only for machines, but also for world propaganda. And when the peasants protest against such robberies and hide their bread for their starving families, they are either shot or banished to Siberia."

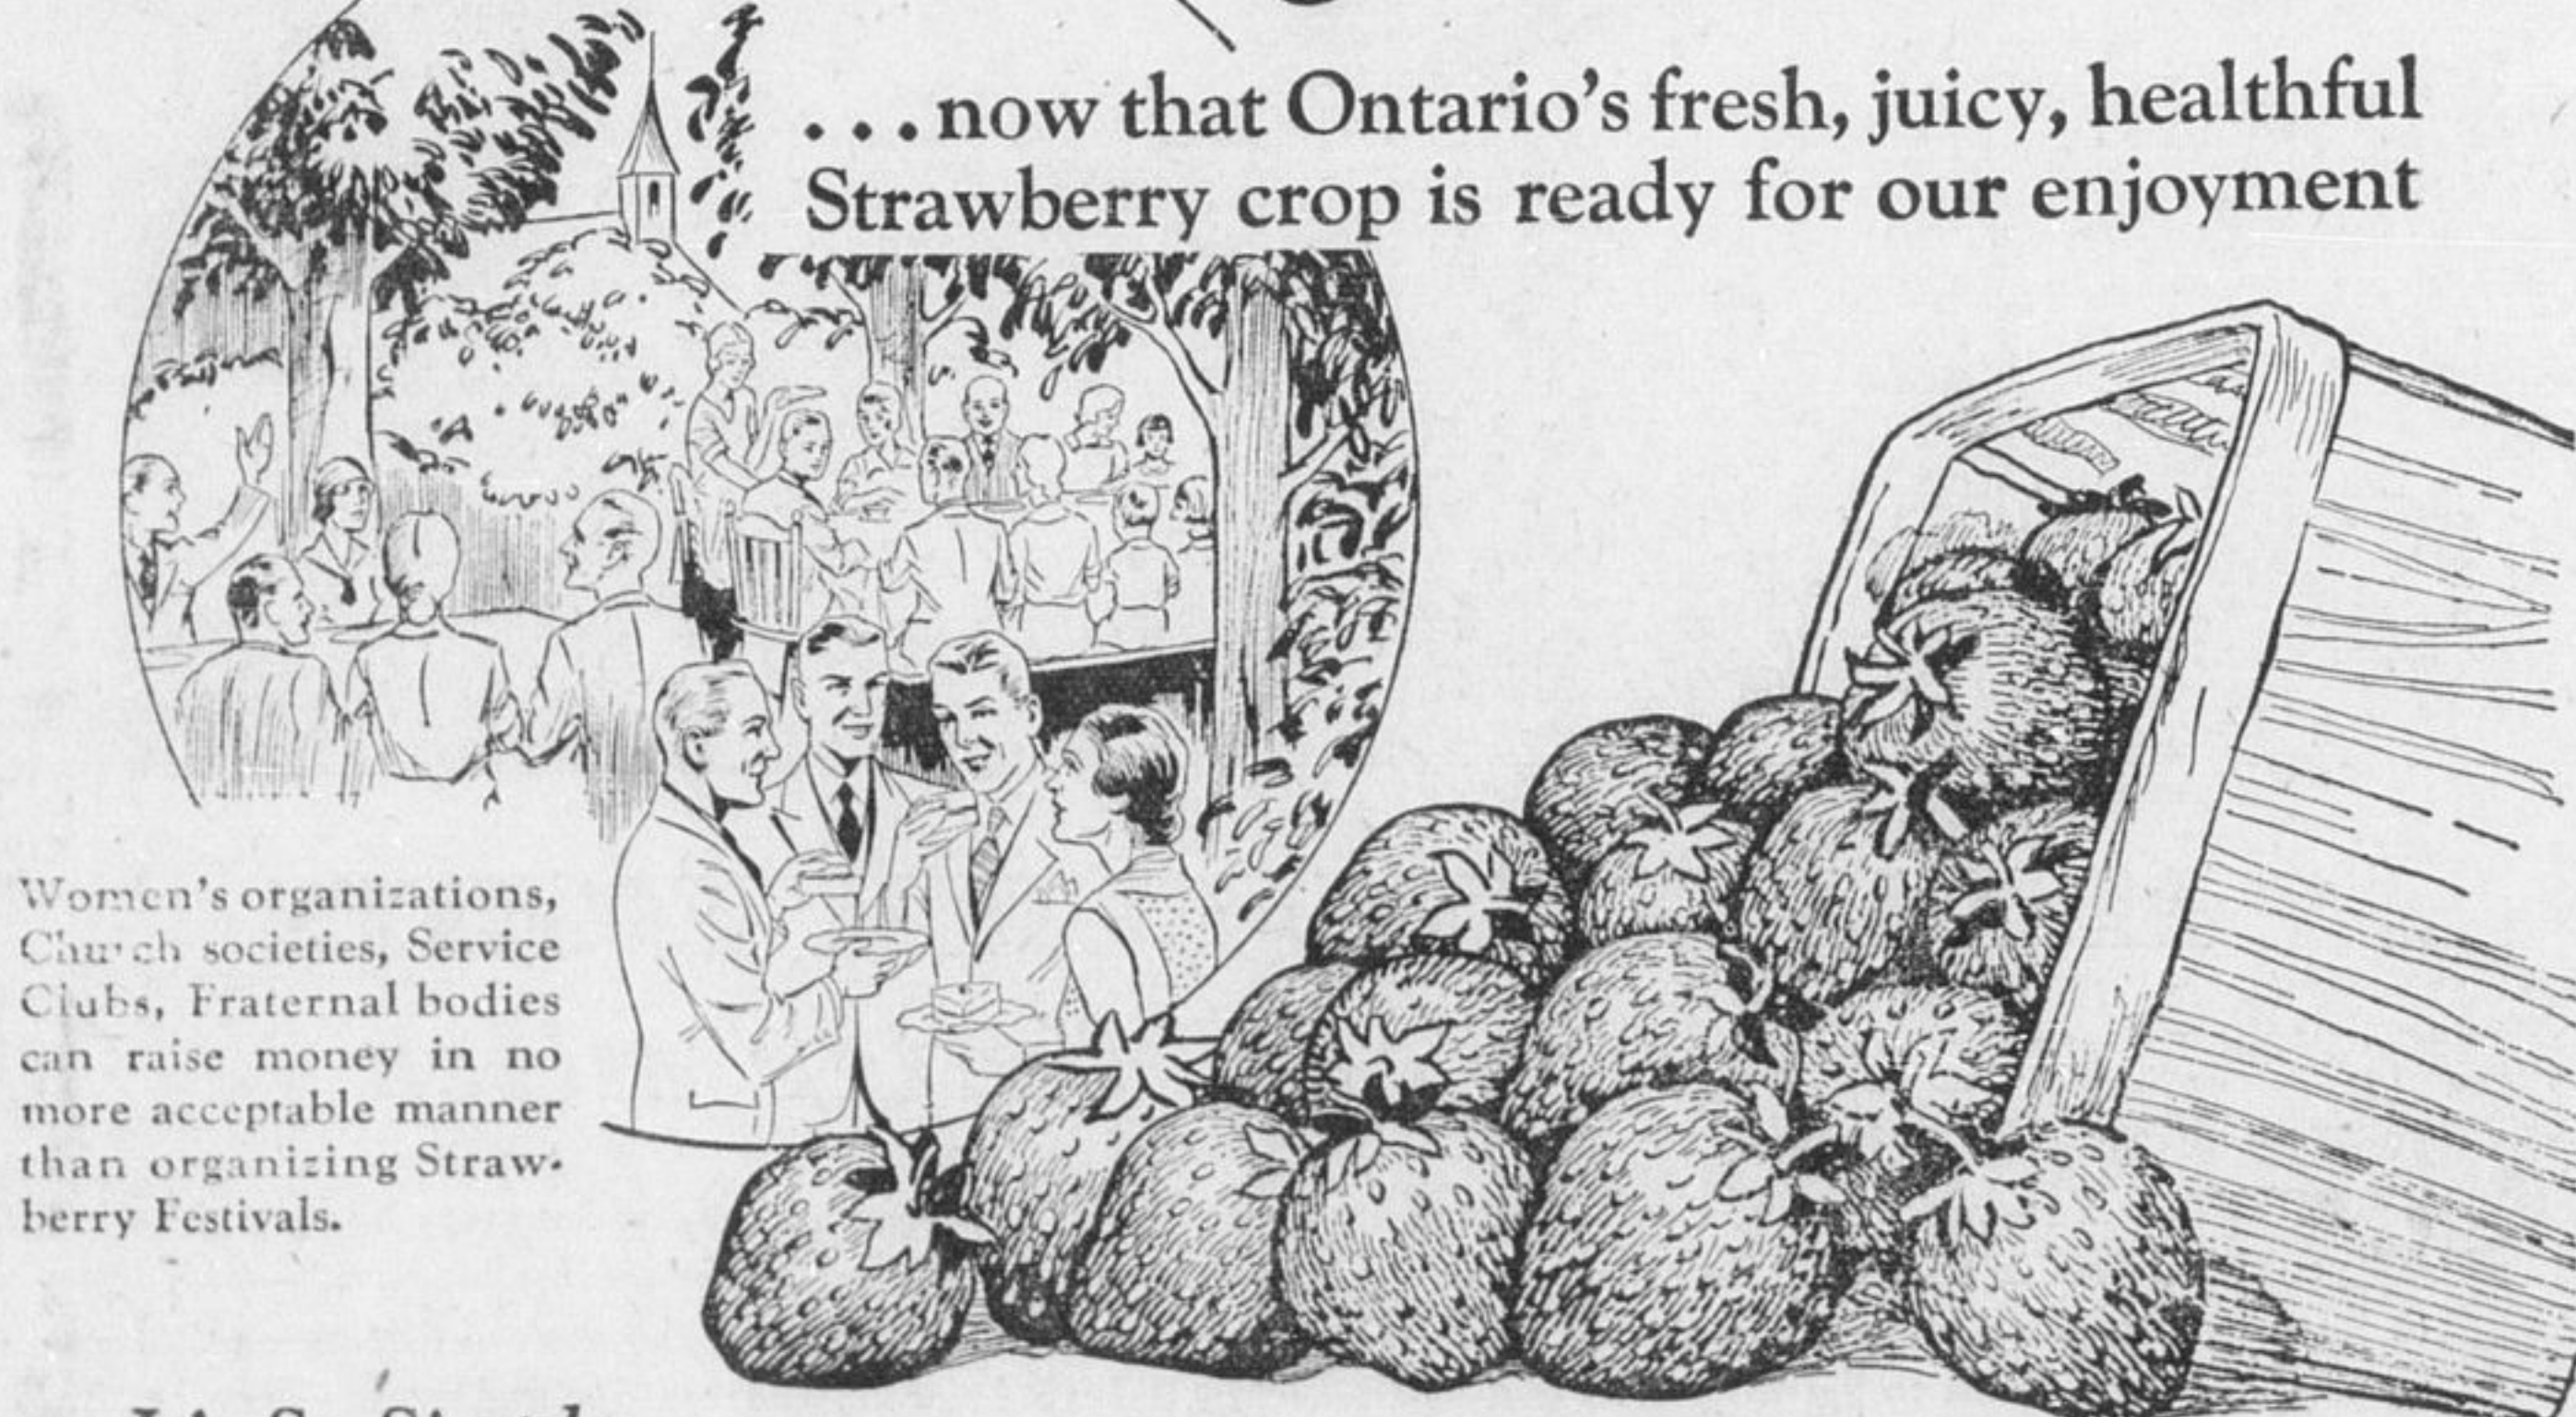

DEATH OF STATION AGENT AT KIRKLAND LAKE SUNDAY

Many friends in Timmins will learn with deep regret of the death on Sunday, June 18th, at 2 p.m., of William Wilson Brennan, agent at Kirkland Lake for the T. & N. O. Railway. The late Mr. Brennan had been in poor health for some time past but his death came as a decided shock to hosts of friends in the North. He was a genial citizen who made wide circles of friends. He was born at Harrisburg, Ont., some forty-five years ago. He joined the T. & N. O. staff on March 1st, 1912, as clerk at Charlton. In September of the same year he was appointed agent at Swastika. He was transferred to Kirkland Lake when the latter station was established in November, 1924. The funeral took place on Tuesday of this week at Kirkland Lake cemetery.

The Timmins Snowshoe and Ski Club is arranging for an excursion picnic to Wawatlin Falls on Sunday, July 9th. Watch the next issue of The Advance.
