Naval advices from Hong Kong stated that the British steamer Tungchow had been seized by pirates and later released. It had aboard 75 British and American school children and five teachers among the passengers. One Russian guard was killed. The children were for the most part those of missionaries, and were returning to school at Chefoo after the holidays. All the children are safe.

Premier Hepburn announced that he would not attend the state dinner given by the Lieutenant-Governor. Other cabinet ministers refused the invitation, and the Lieutenant-Governor has cancelled the event. The action of Premier Hepburn is generally considered as a slight upon the Lieutenant-Governor, though most people will credit to innate rudeness on the part of the premier.

It is expected that the New York Stock Exchange and Security Commodity markets throughout the U.S.A. may be closed temporarily when the United States Supreme Court announces its decision in the gold clause case. This proposed action is to prevent untoward action on the part of stocks and to assure some measure of stability until enabling legislation can be passed.

Caught Delivering Beer on Sunday Here

South End Taxi Driver Found by Police with Case of Beer Yesterday. Other Cases Over Week-end.

Sunday evening the police surprised a South End taxi driver in the act of delivering a case of beer to a house on Kirby avenue. The taxi driver was taken in charge, but was later released on $125.00 bail. He will come before Magistrate Atkinson to-morrow for this breach of the Ontario Liquor Control Act.

Another Sunday evening case was that of a man arrested on Third avenue on a charge of indecent exposure. There were two drunks arrested Sunday evening and Monday morning, the one being found on Kirby avenue trying to find his way home. As the man lives in Schumacher, the police thought he would be safer in the cells than trying to make his way to Schumacher by way of Kirby avenue. The other drunk was taken from a house on Way avenue, the owner of the house asking the police to remove him after he had appropriated one of the beds for the night.

Four drunks arrested on Saturday evening make up the balance of the cases for this week's court, though there may be more on the docket between now and to-morrow afternoon when the court sits. One of the drunks arrested on Saturday evening was a woman who strenuously objected to being arrested. Like the "young lady from Kyle," mentioned in the limerick, "her screams could be heard for a mile." That was one of the reasons for her arrest—the disturbance that she had been creating on street. She assisted her husband in an fight with a smaller man and a citizen who went to the assistance of the smaller man. The police were summoned and one of the officers were presented with a poke in the nose that started the claret flowing. The officer was convinced that the woman was no lady. "No lady," he said, "would hit even a policeman as hard as that."

So Many Hearts are Brave. Each day I see The lifted banners of their courage shine Out of the myriad eyes that look in mine; The banners mankind carry as they march To prove that they are undefeated still, Though tired feet must often drag behind; Though there be scarcely strength to climb the hill, Brave women and brave men; who go their way Without the blare of music down the street; Without the cheers, or the encouragement Of words that would be heartening and sweet. So many have the courage to go on Un daunted by their loss, or pain, or fear; Beaten perhaps, yet holding in their souls The beautiful bright quality of cheer; So many hearts are brave—though well they know How rough the road is that their feet must go.

DOESN'T EXPECT THAT THE WOODCHUCK WILL GET OUT

The Taylor's Corners correspondent writes:—The New Liskeard Speaker as follows:—Well, old man winter is holding our noses to the grindstone, alright. We can't go out without wrapping up snugly. When the mercury drops nearly 55 degrees below zero it's almost cold enough. It gives us a chance to tell our grandchildren a few tall yarns when they grow up, about how cold it was back in 1935. I don't think there will be any chance of the woodchuck coming out to see his shadow on the 2nd of February, if it stays as cold as this, even though it might be a bright day."

That Body of Yours

By James W. Barton, M.D., Toronto When the Gall Bladder is Slow in Emptying

Should your doctor advise a barium meal with x-ray of the stomach and intestine, adding that an x-ray of the gall bladder while not absolutely necessary might be very much worth while, you would be very wise to have this extra examination of the gall bladder made. The cost adds only about one-quarter or one-fifth more to the charge for the x-ray of the stomach and intestine.

A gall bladder that is not doing its work properly may cause symptoms that affect the stomach and intestine, without it being suspected.

The examination of the gall bladder is simple. A dye is taken by the mouth or injected into a vein and this dye outlines the shape and position of the gall bladder under x-ray.

If the gall bladder doesn't fill completely it shows (in 96 per cent. of the cases) that something is wrong with the gall bladder—stones or other condition.

A good gall bladder shadow which is normal in shape, size, and position with an even outline and the right thickness which implies itself and contracts after a meal to a much smaller size, usually means a normal gall bladder.

A very practical and helpful point is obtained by the dye test and x-ray in those who have no particular sharp pains in the gall stones, but feel heavy, tired, discouraged, with lack of ambition. The test in these cases shows that while the gall bladder has the right size, shape, and position, it is "slow" in emptying, thus showing a general "sluggishness" of the liver and gall bladder system.

In these cases bile salts or Epsom salts in small doses are given for two or three weeks and the patient is instructed to take thereafter bending exercises with knees straight, horse-back riding or any form of exercise that will squeeze or shake up the liver. Simply taking long deep breaths will send the floor of the chest—diaphragm—down against the big soft liver and give it a squeeze which invigorates the circulation and prevents sluggishness. Remember a sluggish liver and slow emptying gall bladder can give you a very gloomy outlook on life.

EASY EMBROIDERY STITCHES OF MANY NAMES, WHAT THEY MEAN AND PATTERN OFFER

Embroidery stitches have a fascinating way of acquiring names from their appearances. Since these may be similar to more than one thing, there frequently are many names for a single stitch. Also, since embroidery fashions fluctuate like all other styles, a name once commonly used, sometimes gives place to another so that seeming freshness and novelty appears. The student of stitchery is not surprised at this, but a novice is confused.

A—Herringbone Stitch; B—Herringbone with French Knots; C—Barred Witch Stitch; D—Barred Russian Cross Stitch; and a fascinating Feather Stitch Tree in the centre.

A Stitch With Many Names An interesting example of variety in names for a single stitch is found in Herringbone Stitch. It has at least four separate and distinct names besides the fancy types. Fagotting is another familiar name. You will notice how the stitches cross and recross much as fagots are piled up. Russian Cross Stitch is another name, since the stitch is a favourite one in Russian embroidery. The last one I am giving is odd indeed. Witch Stitch, a name whose pedigree is still hazy. Presumably it is associated with the idea of fagots burning on a pyre. The name Herringbone is self-explanatory to everyone who has eaten the fish with their hundreds of small bones.

Barred Witch Stitch Barred Witch Stitch is a name given to regulation Herringbone when inter-twined with another strand which should be of a contrasting colour. Barred Russian Stitch is the name when short running stitches, of contrasting colour preferably, are taken horizontally

Pattern Offer Illustrated directions for making Herringbone, Barred Witch Stitch, Barred Russian Cross Stitch and Dotted Herringbone, together with a Feather Stitch Tree can be had for 10 cents accompanied by a stamped (3-cent), and self-addressed envelope inclosed with a request directed to Lydia Le Baron Walker care of this paper. These stitches are some of the easiest and most attractive decorative stitches.
