Advices Holding of Shares Gold Stocks

Irrespective of Court Decision, Gold will be at High Levels. Advice to Study the Situation and Act Logically.

There are many who are specially interested in the decision to be handed down by the Supreme Court of the United States and are anxious as to the effects of the decision when made. There is a possibility that the decision may be given out to-day. In connection with the matter The Northern Miner's leading editorial last week takes up the question involved and covers the matter so ably that the editorial is given herewith for the benefit of readers of The Advance.

"One would suppose, looking at recent quotations for gold mining shares, that the only market for Canadian-mined gold is the United States, and that the market is in grave danger of disappearing.

"The facts of the gold situation impressively point out:

"That a market of approximately $35 an ounce will continue for Canadian-mined gold and that there is good probability of this price increasing this year. Long before the United States fixed its price at $35 an ounce, Canada was selling gold regularly on the British market at $30-$31 an ounce. This was 18 months ago. Since that time we have sold gold on the London market at $35 an ounce, at times when exchange made it favourable for us to sell there rather than to the States.

"The price of gold in London of approximately 142s. an ounce, or $35 Canada, represents British devaluation of British money. Would any sensible person argue that because the United States, by reason of a mere legal decision on bond contracts, must retreat from its monetary position, Great Britain must do so also? Would Great Britain, without lifting a hand to help itself, see all its trade and recovery advantages tossed away by reason of an American court decision? The idea is ridiculous. It is also to presume that the United States will fundamentally alter its monetary policy. As we have pointed out in previous editorials, a retreat from the 50-cent dollar, or $35 gold, would plunge down wheat markets, cotton markets, wage levels, to say nothing of security prices. The United States government will stand by its monetary policy. If there should be a Supreme Court verdict adverse to it, our opinion is that the administration would promptly "plug the gap" by the necessary announcements and enactments.

"And we are not so sure that the Supreme Court findings, when they come, will be adverse to the administration's monetary plans. Of course, legal decisions are often made upon little quirks in law, upon fine minutiae, but the constitution very plainly gives Congress authority to "coin money and regulate the value thereof," and there are several precedents in Supreme Court case history which intimate that the legality of Congressional action, and efforts in devaluing the dollar and in raising the price of gold will be upheld. In any case it may well be that, whether the verdict is favourable or unfavourable, fright will have done its worst before the day of judgment.

"It has been the duty and responsibility of The Northern Miner upon other occasions to warn people against selling the shares of good gold mines. One notable occasion was September, 1931, when Great Britain departed from the gold standard and gold stocks tumbled in a panicky rush. There seemed to be few on this continent able to read the true significance of Britain's move. The Northern Miner then loudly called for the exercise of good common sense. It urged people not to sell their stocks. It told them that gold was going higher. It spoke almost with a lone voice in a babble of frightened scaremongers. There have been occasions since when it has been necessary to steady public thought in relation to gold. People are better educated today on gold and money matters, yet there are some who imagine that gold is going all the way back to $20.67 an ounce in the United States and all over the world. It is necessary again to assert that gold is not going to go back in price, but it is not necessary to shout the message because people know better today about such things.

"How do we know that the cases which the Supreme Court justices are now considering were not inspired for the purpose of getting a ruling on the legal aspects of the American monetary policy? A man building a house examines its foundations, to make sure that they are sound, before completing the walls and structure. How do we know that the United States is not making sure of its foundations before erecting a higher edifice?

"Looking back throughout the past year we find in virtually all countries, with the possible exception of Great Britain, a rising amount of debt. Looking forward we see ahead of us nothing but a year of still increasing burden. Here and there private individuals and organizations have managed by the putting forth of strenuous effort to bring themselves into or nearer a state of solvency, but such parties find that what they have accumulated scarcely meets the new demands upon them of the tax-gatherers. Social legislation proceeds apace, calling for more money. This is a world revolution, not just a depression.

"In Canada we know that the public debt has expanded almost yearly since the war, and enlarges a million or two a year through the call for public relief and through the plight in which the national railway finds itself. What is proceeding federally is proceeding throughout the land, the provinces, the cities and the hamlets. What we can so plainly see in Canada, we who read can see proceeding throughout the world. Debts do not diminish; they grow mightily. Devaluation of monies was meant to put more money units into circulation, so that debts could be wiped away and mankind given freedom to build a better world. It may be that the process will have to continue another five years, perhaps ten, for there is reluctance to take the long strides that would soon carry countries to their objectives.

"It is widely rumored that the Sterling Bloc, the Gold Bloc, and the United States—these meaning the world—are within three months to stabilize at 50 per cent. of the 1930 monetary value. We doubt it, for the long-headed Englishman gives no sign that he is ready to return to a fixed gold standard, and indeed frequently declares that he and the world are far from ready to assume the responsibility of stability.

"For our part we are unable to imagine, at the worst, anything but a short-lived drop in gold; and we cannot see that. We think the probabilities point to greater inflation, and higher priced gold ounces, once the Americans are assured of the legalities of their policy. We see no need for fear as to gold, and are much surprised that any should have developed."

Stop Price-Cutting for Pulp and Paper

Ontario and Quebec Provinces Plan to Co-operate to Stabilize the Pulp and Paper Industries.

According to advices from Toronto, Ontario will join with Quebec at this session of legislature to eliminate price cutting in the pulp and paper industry, and if possible boost prices.

The Ontario government is contemplating an early reduction in its price of pulpwood as an inducement to get men to work, Premier Heppburn announced, and this statement was enlarged upon by Hon. Peter Heenan.

"The ruthless cutting of prices killed the pulp and paper industry in this country," Mr. Heenan said. "The Quebec and Ontario governments are going to stop that. Many companies have been driven into bankruptcy and others would follow if the price cutting was allowed to go on any farther.

"At the present time the Quebec government has no legislation whatever which permits it to step in and check price-cutting. In Ontario our act only permits us to do anything by holding a gun against the heads of the company," said Mr. Heenan.

"The Act is going to be amended to permit the two governments to act jointly in checking this ruinous competition."

The prices of pulpwood will likely remain the same until Quebec and Ontario have had the opportunity of amending their statutes. This will likely take the form of permitting the cabinet to cancel the license of any company which cuts the price.

While it is not the intention of either Quebec or Ontario to fix the price per ton at which the product may be sold, they will indirectly have this privilege by cancelling the leases of companies which sell below a certain level, officials say.

Toronto Globe:—Dillinger's Chicago lawyer has been acquitted of a charge of harboring the dead outlaw, the judge finding that it was not his duty to hand over Dillinger to the police. The theory probably is that the guiltier a man is the more he is entitled to have the services of a lawyer.

Good Advice in Regard to the Gold Situation

There is sound sense in the advice at the present moment given by The Northern Miner. The Miner heads its advice, "Don't Stampede!" and that is a good heading. The following is the article by The Northern Miner:—

There is a definite campaign of propaganda against gold and its price at the moment. Fresh material has been supplied by the "gold clause" cases before the Supreme Court of United States, decision on which is pending.

Our advice to readers is to take the situation calmly. In the event of an adverse decision there may be a short flurry in gold shares, when nervous or uninformed or misinformed shareholders may do a little dumping. But nothing is more certain than an immediate announcement from Washington of measures to counteract the decision. If necessary a moratorium on gold payments against gold clause bonds may result. Other lines of action are open to the American administration.

Actually, this temporary setback in the American programme of commodity price advances may, when removed, encourage the administration to put into full effect its 50 p.c. devaluation mandate. Gold may rise in price. Those who might have been induced to sell on the scare would then look doubly foolish.

It should be borne in mind that there is an element in the market that would be highly delighted to have people dumpat her home."

their good gold stocks. The "Gold Clause" cases suit their book splendidly. Where there is uncertainty and lack of knowledge, fear is readily created and fear is what the bear element thrives on.

If the holder of gold mining shares will stop to think that these stocks have held remarkably well when all business is in the midst of uncertainties, that if a major disaster were likely selling would have begun, from the top, long ago, they will get some reassurance as to the course of the future. When the pressure of uncertainty is removed, there may be an upward reaction.
