Some Fellows Using Pork Rind as Fishing Bait

(Frank Adams, in London Advertiser)

In a recent issue of The Rotarian and also published in condensed form in The Readers Digest, an article written by Ray Giles outlines a number of "hobbies" that became popular and successful ventures and money-making businesses. The one in reference to Al Foss and his pork rind fishing bait was most interesting to me. Foss saw a Florida fisherman using pigskin as a popular bait while on a visit to the Florida fishing grounds. He discovered that pork rind was more durable and profitable than pigskin. With his home-made bait he pulled in fish so fast that his friends appealed to him for some of that bait. He decided to market the Al Foss "Pork Rind Bait" and it blossomed into such a success that he became wealthy.

Details of Shooting at Hoyle Told Jury

to give a formal statement. Police, who knew him in Halleybury, had recognized him, but did not seem to be able to keep his mind on any one subject. Asked whose idea it was to steal the gas out of Mr. White's car, Police had answered, "All of us!" Constable Pretorius asked about the Pearce brothers said their record was fairly bad. One of the Pearce's told him they had gone out in a car borrowed from a man at the tourist camp. In searching the car he found two rifles under a pile of other goods in the rumble seat. When he saw the car first he did not see the rifles.

John Howitt, merchant, of Hoyle, told of hearing a car come down the road at 11:30 on the evening of June 18th. As it was travelling without lights and stopped in front of the garage, he phoned Mr. White's whose garage had been broken into and robbed before. He heard a ripping noise as if a board was being torn off. He had put on the flood lights when car started back and had detained Percy Pearce who was in the car. When Mr. White told him that one man had been shot he phoned for the police and a doctor. Mr. Howitt said he had only heard two shots.

Ewart Pearce's counsel, A. C. Brown, said that as his client was charged with an offence under the criminal code he was entitled to protection. Ewart Pearce said that he and his brother and Eddie Pearce had borrowed the car from two fellows from the States. They had no definite object in view in making the trip. As it seemed odd they stopped at Hoyle to put the curtains on the car. Asked if the lights were on the car, his counsel advised him not to answer. When the witness continued, he said, "I wanted a can to get water from the river. He had picked up one can but finding it no good, threw it in the ditch. They then climbed over the fence into the yard to see if they could get a can. He found a can. Just then he heard Mr. White say, "All right boys!" Then White shot at them, according to this witness. "I kept on going," the witness said. Later he had heard White say "I see you!" and shoot again. He said he heard five shots. "There were three at me and two at Percy," he said. He didn't know there were rifles in the car. "Did any of you touch anything in the car?" Crown Attorney Caldwell asked him. "No," the witness replied emphatically.

Juror Smith asked if the young man had tried to get into the garage. "I object!" said his counsel. Percy Pearce said he was 21 years of age. He gave similar evidence to that of his brother in regard to the curtains. He said he remained at the car while the other two looked for a can to get some water from the river as the engine was warm. He heard White say, "All right boys!" That was all White said, the witness claimed, the shot being fired immediately afterwards. He saw Police going over the fence, and then White said, according to the witness, "I get you, you—" Then Police dropped, but tried to run again. White firing shots at him. Asked by Juror Borland if it was very dark the witness said it was light enough for him to see all he had described.

A. C. White when asked before he gave his evidence, said he did not want any protection. He was anxious only to give the facts. When John Howitt had called him by phone he had dressed and put his gun in his pocket. He went out of the front door and made his way to the garage. Another time robbers had been at his garage he had missed them by going out the back door. He saw what he took to be two figures standing up and one kneeling down by the garage door. He thought they were syphoning gas from his car. "All right, boys!" put them up!" was what he had said. One man ran towards him, and he had pulled the trigger of his revolver but it had only clicked. The man then veered towards the gate. He thought there was a man still kneeling down near the garage door and he was trying to keep him covered. He called to the fleeing man to stop or he would shoot. When he thought the man at the gate was stopping to shoot at him, he shot towards him. He said he fired to make the men stop. "I did not intend to shoot anybody," he said in answer to a question by the Crown Attorney. His idea was to frighten them into stopping. He had fired several shots. In one case he had fired in the air because he saw a shadow moving and thought it might be a horse or a cow and he did not want to do injury. "What was your idea in shooting?" asked the Crown Attorney. "To protect myself," was the answer. To the question as to whether he was an expert revolver shot, Mr. White replied that he had been at one time, but now he was not so good as he had only ten per cent. vision in the one eye and 30 per cent. in the other. Mr. White said that what he had believed to be a man kneeling down had proved to be a pile of blankets taken out of his garage apparently ready to be carted away. The garage door had been opened by smashing a panel and reaching in to lift the bar on the door. The men had left little gas in the car. They had also let out the air in one tire and loosened the nuts on the rim of the other. He identified a bar of iron picked up at the garage, this being evidently used to break in the door, also a piece of rubber tubing used as a syphon and a 5-gallon can. These were all entered and marked as exhibits in the case.

Evidence was also given in the case in reference to the bringing out of Eddie Pearce to the hospital, Mr. White driving him to Timmins after fixing his car. Percy Pearce, who had been held by Mr. Howitt was locked up by the police. Ewart Pearce was picked up by the Timmins police the next day after the shooting. After hearing the evidence, the jury after a brief deliberation returned the verdict as noted.
