Golden Rule Still the True Guide of Mankind

So Guest Speaker Tells Second Supper Meeting of Tuxis Grads on Monday Night. Hockey, Bowling and Basketball may be Taken up by Recently Formed Club.

"You young men were born in a time when the world seemed as if it were turned upside down," J. P. Lynch told the Tuxis Grads on Monday night at the club's second supper meeting, "but deep down underneath not a thing is different than in the world of your grandfathers. There is just as much joy at birth, as much happiness in marriage and as much real sorrow at death as there ever was. You hear much of the ruthless rich and even the gangster has been made a hero in the country to the south of us, yet the Golden Rule is just as firmly implanted in the hearts of men as it ever was."

The Grads were 25 strong for the meeting held in the Green Apple Pie. It was an enthusiastic group of young men who took part in the affair Monday. With President Ray Wallingford in the chair Secretary Harold Craig doing a rousing job as song leader, and W. H. Wilson at the piano, the evening's programme got away to a good beginning. "Zig" Ostrowski had made it possible, the meeting was told, for all the funds collected that night to go directly into the treasury. He received a most hearty vote of thanks from those present.

Next Meeting December 9th
After it was decided to hold the next supper meeting on December 9th and to have the tickets ready this week, each member was asked to bring one more along with him for the pre-Christmas gathering. Tickets are available now from the officers of the club, from a number of the members and from P. T. Molesley.

The Grads will enter teams in a number of town leagues, it was proposed. Hockey, bowling and basketball were all suggested and all found favour with those present. It was felt that first-class teams could be entered in almost any branch of sport. Ski hikes and other activities are planned for the winter. The committee in charge of sport was selected as follows: George Dewar, John Roberts, Bill Dunn, Zig Ostrowski, M. Rupert.

Mr. Lynch, as guest speaker of the evening, congratulated the young men on having formed themselves into such a worth while organization but exhorted them to get behind their officers to help in every way possible in putting the thing over with a bang right from the first, so that the aim of the club, helping others, might be carried out as soon as possible. "To-day we seem to have set aside everything formerly counted as precious in a chase for the almighty dollar. There was a day when men without a dime were sometimes looked up to as the finest in the community."

Finer Things Forgotten
This grasping for wealth while forgetting the finer things of life made the theme of the speaker's address. To illustrate better he repeated a speech once made by Roe Fulkerson at a Kiwanis International convention in Milwaukee some years ago in which a bunch of keys stood for all that a millionaire had gathered in his life of struggle for money.

"On the key ring of every business man there is a key for which there is no lock," he said; "but the man is afraid to throw it away for fear he might remember sometime which one of his possessions the key will unlock."
The first key on the millionaire's ring was that of his home, a place to which he went late at night and left as soon as possible the next morning. "In the lives of nine out of ten business men of the United States and Canada the home has been relegated to a very small place," he told the Grads as he pleaded with them to make their own homes the centre of their lives.

The Other Keys
The second key was that of the millionaire's summer home. "Eat, let hadn't brains enough to enjoy it," said Mr. Lynch. "His every thought centred on how he could make more money."
The third key was that of his motor car. "The motor car can get a man into more trouble, summonses and so on in a year than any man should have in a lifetime," said the speaker. In the days of the horse, life did not move so quickly and a man had to be more of a philosopher, he said.

The fourth key unlocked his motor boat. It was for sale, like a great many motor boats, for the man was not content to leave it as it was when running smoothly but always had to be tinkering with it, trying to get more speed.

The fifth key opened his office, "where he spent his days trying to figure out ways and means of getting the better of his fellow man."

The sixth object on the key ring that took the millionaire's attention was a bottle opener. Liquor had ruined more lives than any other single agency, the speaker told the Grads, as he warned them of the dangers that lay along the path of life.

The last key was that of his safety deposit box, and in that one lay some comfort for the tired millionaire, for there he knew was protection for his family after he had gone, in the form of life insurance and bonds.

Mr. Lynch received a round of applause from the young men and M.

Urges Government Station for North

Objects to Interference with Commission Broadcasts and Other Practices.

Timmins, Ont., Nov. 19th, 1935
To the Editor of The Advance, Timmins:
Dear Sir:—I have been reading with great interest in your columns your support for a Government radio station to give the people of the North something for their two dollars.
Station CKGB in Timmins is going beyond all bounds when it comes to advertising. It is had enough to listen to it during the week-days, but when they start advertising on Sunday it's about time the Canadian Radio Commission stepped in and curbed this unreasonable advertising. If the station can't make enough money during the week without bringing in Sunday it's about time it shut down.

Another habit they have is butting in on Commission broadcasts. If they want to broadcast their programmes let them do so, but if they want the public to listen they will have to stop butting in with advertising.

I stopped listening to it some time ago, when I heard they were going to broadcast a programme through the Commission from London, England. It was from Paladium Music Hall and I was enjoying it, when bingo—"We will now bring you correct time through the courtesy of the cleaners!" When we were transferred back to the Commission the English programme had finished, so what's the use of this station hooking up with the Commission.

I have read the radio rules, and if I read them right there is to be no breaking in on Commission broadcasts. A record is supposed to be scrapped after being played once. Are all the old records played day after day "new" ones?

Now that we have a change in government it is hoped you will continue your fight for a Government radio station for the North so we can listen to our Commission programmes without advertising interference.

I am forwarding a letter to the Commission in regard to such a station and stating my reasons for such.

"One who is Disgusted."

Young-Davidson has Output of $79,800 for October

Young Davidson Mines, whose property in the Matachewan district is being developed by Hollinger Consolidated Gold Mines, in October produced bullion to the value of $79,800, which compares with the high record month of September, when output totalled $82,500. Last month the mill maintained a daily rate of 700 tons, with feed mostly from the big low-grade ore body. The shaft going down to permit underground development has attained a depth of 300 feet. It is stated that a depth of 275 feet good ore was encountered in the shaft. When the shaft is completed and development is under way underground the company will supply millfeed from this source, thus eliminating the difficulties encountered in open-cut mining in the winter season.

Term of Two Months for Fake Hold-up Story

Young Man Sentenced Under English Common Law. First Case of its Kind in the North, Probably in Canada. Other Interesting Cases at Police Court Here.

The English Common Law, built through the centuries by British judges, was used in Timmins police court on Tuesday in a case which is without precedent in the North and for which no similar record could be found for the whole of Canada.

Adelard Carpentier will spend the next two months in Halleybury jail for having made a false statement to the effect that a man unknown to him had held him up, attempted to stab him with a knife, had cut his clothes and stolen $55 from him. By doing so, it was charged, he had caused officers of the law to devote their time and services to the case, had temporarily deprived the public of the services of those police officers, and he did unlawfully effect a public nuisance.

After hearing this long and rather serious-sounding charge, Carpentier elected to be tried before Magistrate S. Atkinson rather than go to a higher court.

Became Despondent

He was 29 years of age, he said, and came to Timmins from Buckingham, Quebec. His search for work had been unsuccessful and his quickly mounting bank bill was a source of worry. He became very despondent. The scheme that finally came to his mind was that if he let it be known he had been robbed, his landlady would not press for her money and would let him stay on until he could find work.

"That was a very silly thing to do," commented his worship, "People get very terrified if they believe men are going around the town ready to stab and rob."

The telling of the story created a good amount of hasty activity about the police station. They were ready to spend whole days on the case in order to guard the safety of others.

"I never done no wrong your honour and I'm real sorry," pleaded Carpentier.

"This is the first case we've ever had of this kind," remarked the magistrate, as he and Crown Attorney S. A. Caldwell discussed the punishment that should be meted out. Under the Criminal Code of Canada, five years in jail for any offence not contained in the code may be given. The English Common Law, under which this case was being tried, made it possible to give anything up to life imprisonment. Lawyer Offers Service

At this point Dean Kester, who had appeared in court as counsel in a previous case, took up the defence of the young man. He asked if he was in order, and receiving permission to speak, asked leniency for Carpentier, saying that he knew of his family, that they were respectable people. "This young chap made a mistake. If you could see fit to give him suspended sentence in this case I think the ends of justice would be served," he concluded.

"I'm afraid I'll have to give you something," his worship addressed the young man. "Two months."
"Please, your honour, have mercy on me," pleaded Carpentier.
"I'm afraid I can't make it any less this time," concluded the magistrate.

Had $87.64 in Gold

Antoine Maloche will face trial in Cochrane next week on a charge of high grading. He pleaded not guilty in police court when the charge was read, but asked trial before judge and jury.

When arrested on Wilson avenue near midnight of November 16th, Maloche was found to be in possession of a quantity of granular gold valued at $87.64. Chief Paul had made the arrest and had been accompanied by Deputy Chief Salley and Robert Allen. The gold was in the man's left hand overcoat pocket, was contained in an envelope and wrapped in newspaper.

He found it on his way home from work, he is said to have told police, "just where you come onto the cyanide."

"Was he coming off the eleven o'clock shift?" asked Crown Attorney Caldwell.

"I don't know whether he came right off shift or whether he had been some place else first."

Under cross examination by Dean Kester, attorney for the defence, Chief Paul stated that he had no search warrant.

"Were you looking for a parcel such as this?"

"Yes."

"Did he say when he found it?"

"It seems to me he said a few days previously."

Magistrate Atkinson, who had been examining the wrapper, looked up and asked: "Is this the newspaper that was wrapped around it when you took possession of it?"

"Yes."

"This newspaper is dated November 16th, a few days after he was supposed to have found it."

A. C. Estelle, McIntyre assayer, testified that the granular metal was actually gold and that its value was $27.50 an ounce, gold at $35 an ounce troy. The total value was $87.64, he said.

Completed Horse Deal

A horse trading deal brought Joseph Bouliane to court charged with theft and P. A. Morin as the complainant. Bouliane had agreed on Tuesday of last week to trade a team of horses to Morin for a car. On Wednesday he delivered the horses to Morin and on Friday night he accepted a transfer of the car from Morin to himself. On Saturday he had gone out to Bigwater lake and taken one of the team away from a man in the employ of Morin and had gone to Morin's house here and taken the second of the team.

"Why did you do that?" asked the magistrate.

"I changed my mind about the bargain because the car wasn't in good shape."

According to Morin, Bouliane was to (Continued on Page Eight)

To Add More Postal Conveniences Here

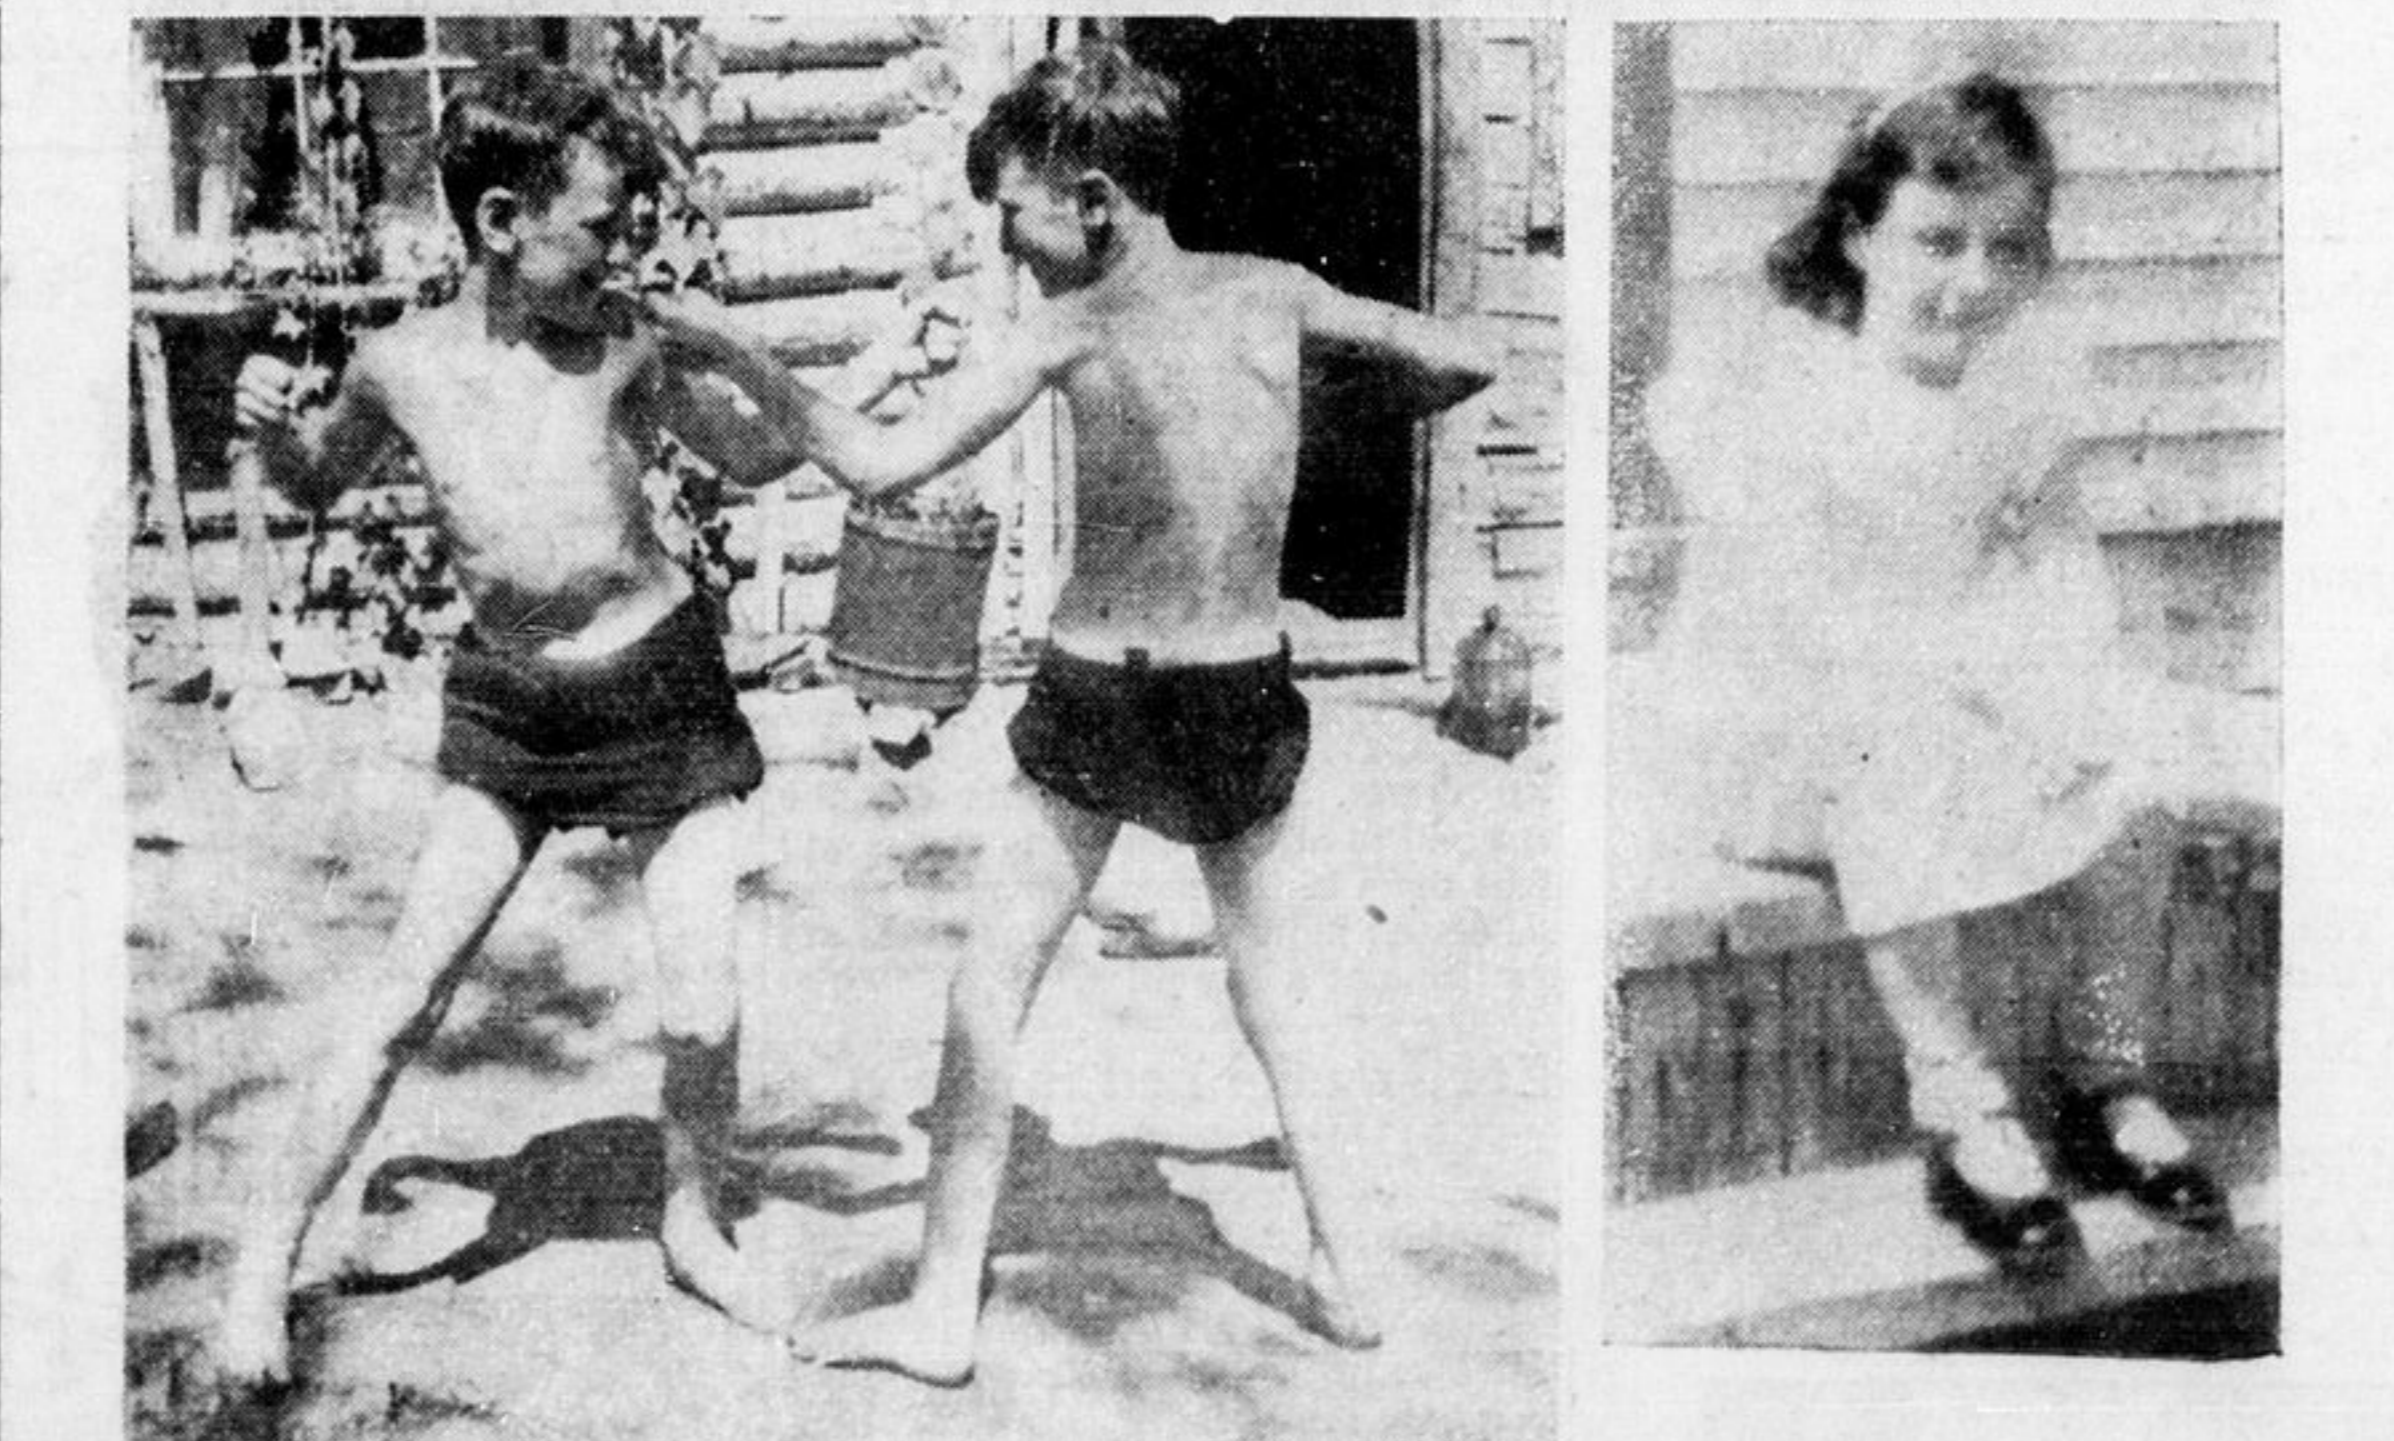

Mail Boxes for Collection of Mail at Different Points in Town. More Post Office Boxes.

The postal service in Timmins will probably be improved within a comparatively short time, prominent local Liberals believe. The addition of boxes for daily collection of mails at a number of points in the town, a service recommended some months ago by a postal inspector, will in all probability be provided for in the first estimates struck by the new government at Ottawa.

There is also a need for more post office boxes, it has been learned, and it is altogether probable that these will be provided at the same time. Otherwise, service at the local post office is considered as being excellent and no other changes are contemplated, nor will any others be recommended from here, it is anticipated.

The idea of door to door delivery of mail is not practical in Timmins, it has been pointed out several times, on account of the hour at which the only train carrying mail arrives in Timmins. Should delivery be begun, there would be no possibility of getting mail the same night it arrives here, nor would it be possible to get Saturday night's mail on Sunday.

Children Perished When Home Destroyed
