Wants British Conference to be Held in New Zealand

A round-table conference between representatives of the British Commonwealth of Nations on questions of defense and other vital problems is favoured by the Prime Minister of New Zealand, Michael J. Savage, who considers that such a conference should lay down a general policy of develop-

"Naturally I should like to see the conference held in New Zealand," says Mr. Savage, "but the wishes of all parties must be considered. A talk on common problems is much needed. At the present time we do not know enough about what Great Britain is doing, and Great Britain does not know enough about what we are doing, and that also applies to other parts of the Empire. "For instance, we do not know what they are doing in Australia to any great extent. I notice that there is a possipility, according to a newspaper report, of British ministers visiting the dominions. If they do come, and come only to express their own ideas about things—which may be capsized when they get back—we won't get very far.

They should have some authority beaind them and some ideas." Mr. Savage added that when repreentatives of the British Empire meet they should begin at the beginning, and the beginning meant the filling in of the empty spaces, not with struggling wage-earners, but with people using the land and developing industries.
