A MERRY CHRISTMAS

A merry Christmas! The words ring through the world to-day, as they have rung through the centuries! And never has the world needed the words the sentiment behind the words, or the truth behind the sentiment, more than at the present time.

The world has come a long way since the first Christmas! Most people will be ready to admit that most of the progress that the world has made has been due to the Christmas spirit. Even the material advances, the wonderful inventions, the mechani cal devices, the mighty business and industrial systems and developments-not one of them could have been born without self-sacrifice, without thought for others predominant. Not one of them could have lived in a world given over altogether to selfishness and personal aggrandizement. None of the co-operation-on which alone can be built and maintained the intricate financial, industrial and business systems that are the very lifeblood of the modern world-would be possible without goodwill and understanding. Sacrifice, service goodwill, thought for others-these are the fibre of the Christmas spirit. One of the most serious troubles in the world to-day is the tendency to accept the material as greater than the spiritual. It is a tragic error. The machine is not greater than its maker. The wonderful devices of the modern day rust and break. The mighty buildings that dwarf the pyramids crumble and fall. The most solid of earth's material things prove frail before the hand of time. The history of the North gives apt illustration of the truth of the thought of the inferiority of the material. Fire swept this country more than once and wrecked the mightiest materials that the hand of man had made. But that was not the end. The spirit of the North was greater than the material, greater than fire, greater than disaster. All the material things that had been swept away were replaced by greater, because the spirit of adventure, of faith, of hope remained unconquered. What happened in the North has happened in countless elsewheres. Earthquakes, floods disasters, toss away the material growth of years but there is always re-building so long as the spirit remains. The present day is great, not because of the material progress, but in reality despite it all Sentiment rules the world. When it doesn't it will be too bad for the world. At Christmas time people seem to realize all this. At this time of year men are not ashamed to admit that a happy child is a greater glory to nation than the latest in battleships; that the helping hand is a truer work of progress than the tallest skyscraper; that the material is a thing of limits, but there are no confines for the spirit.

The world needs Christmas to-day to avoid repeating the folly of Babylon, Rome, Greece, Goth-

A merry Christmas to the world! The world needs it-needs the goodwill, the jollity, the freedom, the friendliness, the joy of Yuletide.

A merry Christmas to all!

MORE POWER TO THEM!

It was Sir Matthew Hale, English judge and historian, who said some three hundred years ago that "when rogues fall out, honest men get into their own."

That was before the libel laws got the way they are, so a more modern version may be necessary to apply the proverb. How would it be to say that "when honest men fall out, then rogues come into their own"?

sions, letting the public take their choice. In any case there has been a considerable falling-out in regard to politics and the power question in Ontario. Indeed, Ontario has experienced the greatest epidemic of fallings-out in the history of the province. First the Henry Government fell lief that is chiefly for those who came to the North out of favour with the people, and then the govern- after the depression hit the rest of the country. It is no credit to him or his government, for the The private power companies fell out of friendship North is still suffering from the necessity for rewith the Hepburn people and woke up to find that lief. One of the most flagrant fall- Christmas and a Happy New Year!"

outs was when Premier Hepburn fell out with the courts because they wouldn't fall in with his ideas.

But all these fall-outs fall into insignificance compared to the dull sickening thud last week when The Globe and Mail fell out with Hon. Mr. Hepburn and Hon. Mr. Hepburn replied by falling out with The Globe and Mail. The Globe and Mail says that Hon. Mr. Hepburn did wrong in repudiating the power contracts and that he should fall over himself to repair this grievous injustice that has not only meant loss to many innocent people, but has also caused injury to Ontario's good name and financial standing. Hon. Mr. Hepburn retorts by saying The Globe and Mail has become the tool of moneyed men, and that he is the lad who can take a couple of falls out of it. "That stuff's all right to fling at Tories and civil servants," is the bold comeback of The Globe and Mail, "but you are falling fast if you think you can get away with that sort of fallishness in this case." Then Mr. Hepburn takes another fall. It looks almost like a flop. "I have always been ready to discuss and confer about this matter of power contracts," he contends, as he extends a sort of invitation to the Quebec power companies to have now the quiet conference that should have been held years ago.

A falling-out between The Globe and Mail and the premier of Ontario is something to write about. The Toronto Telegram is just about hysterical over the matter. It isn't all joy for The Telegram, however. That newspaper can scarcely make up its mind whether to support The Globe and Mail with which it agrees on the question of repudiation, or to back Hon. Mr. Hepburn with whom it doesn't agree on anything. Accordingly, The Telegram has fallen out with both of them. The latest from The Telegram is that the alleged falling-out between the Globe and Mail and Mr. Hepburn is simply a fake—that the premier is only staging a shadowboxing contest to find an easy place to fall—that the whole programme now is Hon. Mr. Hepburn's graceful way of paving the path to new contracts that wlil end the evil and injustice of reckless repudiation without the implied fall-down of admitting that the premier of all Ontario could make a single mistake.

Will the people fall for it?

Still more important is the question: - "When rogues fall out, do honest folks get their due?" and the alternate question:- "When honest men fall out, do the rogues get a fair show at the pickings?"

Merry Christmas! Happy New Year!

In Monday's Globe and Mail appeared a front page story of a Providence, Rhode Island, man who gave a ride to a transient on the road only to find days as in recent years. that his passenger was a notorious pickpocket who had escaped from prison. The motorist was so alarmed at the possibilities of being alone in his car with such a passenger that he stepped on the of the few cases still before the court gas. As a result he was stopped and given a ticket to appear in court for speeding. He was so upset by the incident that he forgot for a moment the character of his passenger. Soon, however, he reached a town where his unwelcome passenger Frayer and Holy Communion at 11 prepared to alight and leave him. The passenger a.m. The services on Sunday, Dec. 27th thanked the motorist for the ride and told him not to worry about the charge of speeding. "Here," said the generous pickpocket, "I'm tearing up the ticket, so you may go on and forget about it. 'That's no good," was the motorist's reply, "the traffic officer put my name and number in his book." "That doesn't help him any or harm you," says the pickpocket, "because I took his book when he was talking just before he let us go." It is a pretty good story. But it appeared in The Advance a couple of months ago and in some other papers before that. It wasn't the same people or the same policeman, but it was the same pickpocket and the same story. Of course, there may be a gang of pickpockets going around the country doing that sort of thing, but the more reasonable explanation is that the despatch was meant for another Toronto newspaper.

Premier Hepburn is credited with making the astounding statement that there is now "virtually Perhaps it might be as well to leave both ver- no relief in the North, except in one or two centres." It certainly adds to the interest of all these days, and this community enterprise on the part of Cochrane is certainly appreciated by all. At least visitors to Cochrane are frank and free in their expressions of appreciation for this appropriate decoration at this Yuletide.

Long Police Court Session Yesterday

But Few Cases of Much Importance Dealt With.

There was a long docket and a long session at yesterday's police court but cases of great importance dealt with Remands were given in the following cases:-Mrs. Beaudoin, attempt to procure an abortion; Veino Laksonen, attempt to murder; Stuart Hurely, breaking, entering and theft; O. A Ruir, breaking and entering; Jim Ho. illegally having liquor.

Sophia Koren was fined $100 and costs for illegally having liquor.

A charge of selling liquor against Louis Cundari, Mountjoy, was dismissed, there being no straight evidence of sale, though the evidence showed the provincial police were justified in suspecting the place, finding so many men there who were strangers to the man of the house. In dismissing the case the magistrate warned the defendant to watch his conduct, especially in regard to having women around. On a charge of theft, Antoine Leblanc was sentenced to three months. The evidence of reputable business men and others, the reports of the police Mrs. David's Funeral and the evident facts of the case, showed that he had taken seven ladies' Held This Morning brassieres from the store of Sam Bucovetsky Ltd. His story of buying the goods from a traveller whom he did Large Attendance at Fun- not know, and his claim that he was a salesman though he said he could scarcely read and so did not understand what the Sam Bucovetsky tickets on the goods signified, failed to im press the magistrate. He was defende by W. O. Langdon, who made out a good case for his client. Sixty days was the first sentence but when the accused jumped up and insulted the cour the additional month made it three.

Two young men were fined $10 and costs each, one for disorderly conduct and the other for fighting at the Riverside Pavilion.

J. Block, who was charged by R Jackson with assault with intend to do bodily harm, was fined $50 and costs, $87 in all, and bound over to keep the peace for two years. In this case one witness was rebuked by the magistrate for failure to keep to the truth, while W. Ackroyd, who happened to be a witness of the trouble was conplimented for the fair and complete evidence given, showing that he had not lost his keen observance as a police officer and his ability to briefly present the facts
