are too polite or too used to celebrities to become excited at the parade. In fact Mr. Barry thinks that maybe Selassie chose Bath because it is noted for its self-restraint in the presence of magnificence. The old Duke of Connaught is a frequent visitor, because, as he says, there is no damn nonsense about royalty in Bath. While Mr. Barry was regarding the ex-Emperor one day last September a lad asked him for his autograph. The request was graciously received, and in few minutes the lad had sold the signature for a shilling. Mr. Barry is too polite to suggest that there may be a racket in which Selassie is a sleeping partner, although there are others more suspicious. He found the ex-King democratic and approachable, with a refined kindly face. He speaks no English but can converse fluently in French, particularly about Mussolini. He is of average height, is about 48 years old, although because he has half a dozen grandchildren, he is generally supposed to be older. The Ethiopians marry at 16.

Sympathy for ex-Empress

The people of Bath like the exiled family and pay tribute to their general courtesy, even though some of their manners may seem a bit odd. "The little ex-Empress," said Mr. Barry, "most gentle of manner, remains overwhelmed with a sadness that befits her exile. I hear the poor lady fails to become reconciled to English ways and frets for the mountain slope that was her home. Probably, at times, because of this, she has no voice, but tears. 'Courage, little Empress; the long day may shortly close.'" The remarks in parentheses are those of Mr. Barry, who is, we fear a shade more sentimental than we. He says that English cooking is probably a nightmare to the Ethiopians, for recently a Bath newspaper advertised for a cook who understands how to cook fish in oil. The inference is that the cook was desired by the Ethiopians, but it seems to us that if this were so it would have been Italians, not fish, that were specified.

Reminded of St. Helena

Most of the Emperor's children and grandchildren are attending expensive private schools in Bath, and one of them accosted by Mr. Barry admitted that he spoke English a little and then proved that he knew it very well indeed. One of the youths drives a car, wears no hat and dashes in and out of shops as though he had been brought up that way. Mr. Barry one day saw a dusky servant sitting on a bench and beside him sat two boys schooling him in English. As he passed the Abyssinian said "I see a cat." The ex-Emperor with his family lives on quite a large estate called fairfield. At midnight all gates leading to the premises are locked. The children play about on the lawns and ride tricycles like English youngsters. To Mr. Barry's sympathetic imagination the sight of fairfield recalled St. Helena though there is the obvious difference that there is no harsh Governor for Haile Selassie. But it seems to us that his chances of being returned in glory to Addis Ababa are about as remote as those of Napoleon to return to France. We still wonder where he gets his dough.

Miniature Turkey Stag. Monday, December 13th

While inability to secure a proper hall for the event made it necessary for the Timmins lodge of the Loyal Order of Moose to drop the regular Charity Turkey Stag for this year, the Moose are not letting the matter pass altogether, but have issued invitations for a Miniature Turkey Stag to be held in the Harmony hall, Fourth avenue, on Monday evening, Dec. 13th, commencing at 8 o'clock. That means that the "thirteenth" of December this year will be a lucky date for all attending the Miniature Turkey Stag. A programme of unusual interest has been arranged there will be boxing, Cornish wrestling, the happy old game of "Gimme," and a musical and literary programme of much merit. The artists for the latter will include Jimmy Cowan, Bill Decon, C. McGill, Ben Davis, Hardrock Harry, Ernest Lorenzo, Alf Snow, Victor Dorigo and W. H. Wilson. The boxing bouts will include—Wadsworth vs Farmer Neable; Bailey vs Dubeau; Sicliatre vs Major; Noseworthy vs Narduzzi; and Theriault vs Perron. In the Cornish wrestling the feature bout will be by Benny and Tallum. The Cornish style

Describing Haile Selassie at Bath

Description of Emperor of Ethiopia in Exile.

(By J. V. McAree, in Globe and Mail)

One of the things that have puzzled us when we have had time enough to space from our own particular puzzles to take a cosmic view is how the exiled Kings and Queens are supported. Most of them seem to have their former thrones between dark and dawn, reaching the border just in time to escape death, or, in the case of the more comely females, a fate worse than death. They have been generally execrated by their subjects. They have had no time for prolonged financial negotiations. They have no trades. Yet they are neither in the movies nor in the breadlines. In a word, they must have got their and got plenty. They seem to have about as much money as ever, and in addition to have escaped the duty of maintaining draughty palaces likely to harbour assassins. We regret to say that our old friend and noctributor

Jim Barry, who was in England not long ago and saw the Emperor Selassie and some of his entourage throws no light on this subject. For all we know, it may be a matter of some delicacy.

Bath Promenade

In a recent address to the Saturday Literary Club Jim made his report on the Ethiopians, whom he found at Bath. In his rather elegant introduction he was quoted as saying: "In the Temagami country in Northern Ontario the sight of a dozen men, women and children trailing Indian-file on a portage would be worth only a single glance, but if you spied a dozen dusky folks, clad in strange raiment, on the classic streets of Bath, England, where Bea Nash, sovereign lord of manners and fashion near 200 years back, swaggered—well, you'd stop, look and listen, especially if the parade were led by an ex-King and a descendant of Solomon, wisest of 'em all, except perhaps, in the matter of wives." You seem to have something there, Jim, and we should have liked to hear you develop the theme. However, he was thinking not of Solomon but of Selassie, and says that on certain days, the ex-Emperor goes shopping, and after him trail the ex-Empress and then, in order of their rank and birth, his sons and daughter.

Bath, Police and Composed.

Also included in the procession are some former chiefs, known as rasas because according to Mr. Barry, of the frequency with which some of them were given the rasberry. But this did not happen in Bath. The people there
