Two Years of War in Spain and the Contest Still On

(From Toronto Telegram)
It is two years this month since Spain entered on the Civil War, and the end seems to be still far off. In 24 months of fighting the gains have all been on the side of the Insurgents. General Franco has conquered the Biscayan provinces, isolated Catalonia, and by cutting communications between Barcelona and Valencia, split Loyalist Spain into two separate parts. He has held Madrid under siege for 19 months and is now attempting to sever the capital from Valencia, so as to have it at his mercy. Against this the government has made no acquisitions to count and its forces have been almost continuously on the defensive. The defensive is stout, however, and Franco's hopes of a quick victory following his swoop to the Mediterranean have been badly disappointed. It is possible that the conflict may last another winter.

From the day when the first shot was fired, Spain has been a source of danger to the world at large. Her strife has caused crisis after crisis in international affairs and not for a moment have the statesmen of Britain and France been able to relax. Time and again, if rash counsel had prevailed, the whole continent would have been set by the ears, and it was prudent statesmanship that averted disaster on innumerable occasions. The danger is still great but there is a growing hope that the dreaded crash may be avoided. The British plan for the evacuation of volunteers, approved by all nations represented on the non-intervention committee, has been accepted, with reservations, by the Loyalists, and it now remains to be seen what reply the Insurgents will give. Even if both approve, it will not mean that the plan can be quickly put into effect, but the step that has been taken is one in the right direction, and the British government is ever on the lookout for an opportunity of mediation, a solution that may ultimately recommend itself to the war-weary forces of both sides. Meanwhile there is noticeable lessening of the tension in the Mediterranean and there are indications, faint at present, that Mussolini may be induced to consider compromise. The position is still critical, but there are wise and far-seeing statesmen working for peace.

Wedding at Church of the Nativity Monday Morning

A quiet wedding took place in the Church of Nativity on Monday morning, when Nora, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Moir of London, Ontario, became the bride of Mr. Francis Kelly, of the Paymaster, son of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Kelly, of London, Ontario. Rev. Fr. Leo Madry performed the wedding nuptials.

The bride, who was becomingly attired for the occasion, was attended by Miss Winnifred Madden, and the groom was attended by Mr. G. Banning.

Hostel Prospector at Icefield Camp, Alberta

Alpine Camp, Columbia Icefield, Jasper National Park, Alta., July 27.—One of the interesting visitors to the 33rd annual camp of the Alpine Club of Canada now proceeding here is Miss Elizabeth Callan, Halifax, N.S. The movement, which is rapidly expanding in this country, is prospecting for trips and Hostel sites. Here in this territory at the apex of the main Rockies range where the Columbia Icefield spreads for 110 square miles at 10,000-foot elevation with some of the largest peaks of the Rockies shouldering through the ice cap, Miss Callan is finding much of interest. She has already made a number of expeditions with the club, including a climb of one of the peaks of Mount Kitchener in the neighborhood of 10,000 feet.

Claims Thousands Taxed Out of Jobs

One Way to Lose Houses. Suggestion for Better Representation of Taxpayer.

In yesterday's Globe there was prominence given to a letter from Dr. Charles Sheard, prominent in public life as well as a physician and surgeon. Dr. Sheard's letter is as follows:—
"The average man owns a house valued at $5,000 and a mortgage of $3,000. On his $2,000 dollars he pays in taxes about $150 each year. How many motor cars would be sold at $2,000 if the annual charge for the markets, instead of $10 was $150? You do not know, but the motor car salesman knows. Ask him what effect it would have upon the number of cars sold. He will tell you there would be few built and few sold if the tax on motor cars was in proportion to the tax on real estate. We would still use motor cars, but we would double up; and that is what is taking place in houses today. People are living two and three families in a house built and intended to house only one, with consequent overcrowding, congestion, slum conditions, directly and entirely attributable to this uneconomic taxation of real estate.

Many After One Job
The unemployment in the building trades, brought about by the stagnation in building, goes much further and deeper than merely those artisans normally employed in the building trades. Not only is it true that practically every material that goes into the construction of houses is produced right here in Canada, giving employment to our own citizens, but the chronic unemployment in the building trades has produced such a glut of unemployed, overhanging the labor market, and has forced members of the families of unemployed artisans, formerly well-established members of society, to seek whatever employment they can get, so that there are a dozen applicants for each position vacant. Under these conditions are employers likely to raise wages?

Under these conditions can carpenters and bricklayers drive a good bargain with their employers and obtain fair wages for the exercise of their skill in the practice of their ancient craft, or must they take what pittance they can get with the alternative of going on relief, presenting to them a Hobson's choice?

Politicians seeking votes have tried to solve the problem by shifting the taxes from one sort of property to another, but with, of course, entirely negative results in so far as relieving unemployment or lessening overcrowding and slum conditions are concerned. The downtown property may be, and probably is, owned by an estate from which one hundred heirs each draw a trifle, while one man may, and often does, own a hundred small houses and obtain exemptions upon every one.

Housing Scheme Not Practical
The Government Housing Scheme is along similar unpractical lines. It is another horse from the same stable that foaled the National Railways, a politician's, not an economist's, way of dealing with the problem.

Real estate in theory constitutes the ideal form of investment for the careful man. Starting as it does, with a small down payment, and giving an ever-expanding equity as the mortgages are retired, it offers a powerful incentive toward saving, equalled by nothing else. How aggravating it can be that after years of self-denial and painstaking thrift, after the mortgages have, with infinite satisfaction, been lifted, that they are replaced by an increasing municipal tax burden, placed there with smug complacency by those who never owned, and never intend to own, a foot of Canadian land.

It has been argued that to restrict the municipal franchise to property owners is to contravene the democratic principle of government to which we are committed; that as all the people alike must be governed by the same laws, all should have an equal share in the making of those laws. This is true, and no one suggests taking away the vote from any one as it affects Dominion or Provincial elections. However, the Municipal Council is not a legislative body, but an administrative body. It makes no laws which affect the conduct of any one. It is concerned with spending of public moneys, and these should be spent in accordance with the views of those who must pay them. There is no other way to get efficient and economical administration of civic affairs, and this is in no way contrary to the principles of British democracy but is strictly in accordance with its best traditions as we see them practised in the British Isles, Australia, South Africa and elsewhere throughout the British Empire, a surer and safer guide to follow than the star-spangled pattern from which we are suffering in Canada today.

Like Cat and Mice Conferring

To ask a non-property owner to serve on a Municipal Council is like asking the cat to sit in at a meeting of a board composed of mice; or, to put it another way, to have members of Council representing tenants is like being asked to contribute to a charity by a canvasser when she herself contributes nothing, but merely seeks to point out to others wherein their duty lies.

The papers may joke about the new way tax rate, but it is a sorry joke to the carpenter who has been taxed out of his job, to the man who has been taxed out of his savings, or to the children who have been taxed out of their inheritance.

Taxation reaching the point of confiscation is in practice communism, and while it may be possible for some to make out a case for the communistic system of government, surely no one would argue that the communistic system and the free economic system can exist side by side in the same country at the same time. That cock won't fight.

Pollution of Montreal River Results in Fine

Halleybury, July 27.—Following several adjournments in which it could not be exactly determined just who to proceed against, Magistrate Gould on Friday disposed of a case against the Roch Francoeur estate, in which they were charged under the Game and Fisheries Act, with polluting the waters of the Montreal River with sawdust, to the detriment of the fish there.

Game Warden E. W. Binkley, of New Liskeard who laid the charge told the court that he had visited the mill of accused company at South Gillies, and had found sawdust going into the river. It was still being blown in to some extent, he also told the court from the fact that had been previously placed along the river bank. On behalf of the defendant company, it was shown that they had made an effort, both last season and this, to overcome the nuisance, and that it had now been successfully combated.

Magistrate Gould registered a conviction and imposed the minimum fine, although he stated, that were the fine not paid, he would be at a loss how to proceed against an estate.

Allowed to Harvest Hay Before Serving His Term

Cobalt, July 27.—William Johnson is quite a pleader. Last week when he came up charged with being intoxicated in charge of a car he pleaded that he was not. He admitted that he had ben somewhat under the weather some little time previously on the same day, but not when he was found in the car. However other evidence was all to the contrary, and so he was found guilty. Then he pleaded that he be not sent to jail for the offence, at least not then, for he had some hay that required immediate attention, and so final disposition was not made of the case at that time to allow the hay crop to be successfully harvested. On Saturday morning the hay was all in and when Magistrate Gould said ten days, Johnson pleaded for only seven, the minimum. However, the pleadings fell on deaf ears this time and ten days it is, as well as the usual taking of the car off the roads for the balance of the summer.
