China to Fight to Ultimate Victory

Chiang Kai-Shek Gives Chinese Attitude.

A despatch from Chungking, China, says: China will continue to fight until "ultimate victory" is won. General Chiang Kai-Shek promised his people this week in a proclamation ascribing abandonment of Hankow and Canton to military strategy.

The commander-in-chief, while declaring his armies were systematically drawing the enemy deeper into the interior, promised that Hankow's fall would prove the forerunner of Chinese offensives along every front.

Says Retreat Planned
The provisional capital was abandoned according to plan and in complete order, Chiang contended. Chinese generals were said to be under instructions to lure the Japanese away from the coastal zones, where superior war supplies and equipment gave the invaders an advantage.

Chiang held that the Chinese had not regarded Hankow as a decisive battleground, but merely as a strategic field of operations to delay the Japanese with the greatest cost to the enemy while defence preparations were made farther to the West. This strategy had proved successful and the Japanese had suffered heavily before Chinese troops finally abandoned the city.

Canton lost all military value after the Canton-Hankow railway was cut. China's troops consequently evacuated the southern city and withdrew to positions farther inland, where the fate of the war is to be decided.

Final Result Important
According to Chiang's proclamation the Chinese command is more interested in the final outcome of the conflict—one of attrition as far as China is concerned—than over the defence or loss of particular cities. He declared: "Even at the outset of the war, the Chinese resistance programme concentrated on three central principles, namely:
"1. Long-term resistance.
"2. Nation-wide resistance.
"3. Struggle for the initiative."
"Only by drawing the Japanese forces into the interior can this initiative be carried out."

"I'd be Awfully Glad if You Did," Said the Officer

(From the London, England, letter of The Ottawa Journal). The crisis aftermath has given rise to scores of anecdotes, many of them wildly exaggerated, bearing upon the weakness of our defences. But I can vouch for the accuracy of the following story, which caps the lot:

At a certain South-Coast town nine Territorials were detailed to man a Lewis gun two or three days before the crisis became acute. A civilian, resident in the town, paused to chat to the nine men, and he asked them how long they had been in training for the use of the Lewis weapon. The reply was: "We don't know how to use the gun. We've had no training at all."

Disturbed and shocked, the civilian mentioned the matter to a local commanding officer, who asked the former to mind his own business. "But it is my business," said the helper. "I handled a Lewis gun in the Great War, and I know something about it. Would you like me to give these nine Territorials a couple of hours' instruction in its use?" "Look here," replied the officer, "I'd be awfully glad if you would." And he did.

Annual Armistice Dinner at Golden Beaver, Nov. 9

Following the custom of past years, Golden Beaver Lodge will have special observance of Armistice and Remembrance Day. Each year the lodge has planned a special Armistice dinner in honour of the Masons from the Porcupine who served King and Country overseas in the last war. Wednesday, November 9th, is the date for this year's Masonic Armistice dinner. For the lodge work the various "chairs" will be taken by Masons who are ex-servicemen. At the dinner there will be a program of much interest, including patriotic toasts, musical numbers, and other entertainment. Reminiscences of the Great War will be featured, no doubt, as usual, a large number of the members of the Order and of the local Masons being ex-servicemen.

Minister of Forests Replies to Critics

Defends Methods Used in Forest Fire Disaster.

Toronto, Nov. 2.—Recent criticism by J. C. W. Irwin of Toronto, in a letter to The Globe and Mail and in a subsequent special radio broadcast, of the Hepburn Government's handling of the disastrous Rainy River district fires and of forestry policy generally was labelled yesterday by Hon. Peter Heenan, Minister of Lands and Forests, as "an insult to the intelligence of thirty-six graduate foresters with technical knowledge, who are engaged by the department and are practicing rather than preaching the science of their profession, and applying to their work the principles of modern forestry."

Mr. Heenan says in part: "As the Minister of Lands and Forests, I always welcome criticisms or suggestions of a constructive character in connection with this department, but neither Mr. Irwin's letter nor radio speech of the same date is constructive or instructive. His dealings with the recent disastrous fires in the Rainy River district would indicate that he is not familiar with Northern Ontario and the many varied conditions there, and he certainly is not familiar with the Rainy River district and the events leading up to the recent fires."

"Unfair Conception"
"Mr. Irwin has built most of his arguments on the basis that the government should spend extra money in the preventing of fires rather than spending large sums after the fires have started. In other words, we should have staff sufficient to cover the entire forest area of Northern Ontario, which comprises 220,000,000 acres, both organized and unorganized, which is absolutely ridiculous. Such a display at a time when human efforts are being consolidated toward meeting a problem that is largely the outcome of a combination of circumstances is an absolutely unfair conception of what is fair and just."

"As far as is known, these fires in the Rainy River district, with one exception, originated in old, settled, organized municipalities that are responsible for their own fire preventive system. On Sept. 28 there were only two known fires in the whole district of Rainy River burning in that area under the jurisdiction of the department. At the same time our rangers were assisting the organized municipalities in combating fires raging in their settlements."

"Regular Tinder Box"
"Mr. Irwin evidently does not take into consideration the long spell of exceedingly dry weather, accompanied by high temperatures, ominous atmospheric conditions and usually high winds, dried-up streams, creeks and pools, that left the muske and surface vegetation a regular tinder box and created a district-wide situation that needed but a spark dropped by a careless smoker, puffed from a passing engine or driven from a settler's clearing operations to burst into blazing sheets within the parched region. A fire starting under these conditions, and fanned by a ferocious wind, no human hand could stay.

"Instead of criticizing what the department has not done, he might have at least inquired what the department is doing in order to safeguard the forest. Had he inquired he would have found that in addition to the 1,150 regular fire-rangering staff the department has for fire protection purposes the following: Fire pumps (power), 572; fire hose, 1,700,000 feet; fire pumps (hand), 2,500; motor boats, 39; motor trucks, 109; aircraft, 28; steel lookout towers, 117; wooden lookout towers, 89; permanent telephone lines, 4,100 miles; radio stations, 55; together with thousands of axes, shovels and other miscellaneous fire-fighting equipment."

"There are also several hundred buildings for the housing of personnel and equipment. During the last four years we have increased the staff by 200 men, 72 pumps and over half a million feet of hose; we have also added seven additional fire protection aeroplanes, some of which are equipped with two-way radio communication. We have added 34 steel towers, connected with various headquarters by telephone or radio, and considerable mileage of telephone lines."

"The government has also spent many millions of dollars in the construction of roads and highways throughout Northern Ontario, which is an added assistance in obtaining quick action when fires occur. This equipment has all been used to good advantage, as evidenced by the record in the Thunder Bay district, in which logging operations have been carried on more extensively than in any other part of the province."

"Reports show to date that, while they have had 177 fires, not more than 2,000 cords of pulpwood was lost, and private property only to the extent of a half-dozen telephone poles."

Blairstown Enterprise: We remember the time when it took two sheep to clothe a woman. Now a single silkworm can do it.
