Value of Royal Visit to Canada Not Overestimated

The following thoughtful comment in the recent visit of Their Majesties the King and Queen to Canada and the United States is from the Mining page of The Globe and Mail of Tuesday this week—

History must appraise the full effects of the triumphal tour of Their Majesties King George VI and lovely Queen Elizabeth and its effect upon world events, but we who have seen them, heard them, followed them every step of the way across this broad Dominion and into the hospitable arms of our friends to the south can possibly take some sort of measure.

"First of all, there can be no denial that the tour was the most successful ever undertaken by British Royalty. Never in the history of the world, British or otherwise, have representatives of any nation ever cut as long, as wide or as deep a swath of good-will through all kinds of people, subjects and aliens alike.

"And that triumph was in greatest degree personal achieved by simplicity, kindness, sympathetic understanding and unflinching graciousness of two fine young people, who carry upon their shoulders one of the greatest responsibilities of modern times. The common touch was there repeatedly,—in the kindly solicitation for the returned boys, the intimate word to the old or the very young; the final words of thanks to the press and to those who had served them en route; the happy, carefree buoyancy with which they mingled with their own people, unafraid and smiling.

"This fine Royal Couple have taught us much. They have even taught us much of our own Canada, impressed us with its promise of future, made us forget a pessimism born in European affairs. They have bidden us go forth to a great and happy destiny. And they have stamped the loyalty of Canada to the crown, taught us something of the great heritage of integration with the British Empire.

"Is it too much to hope and to believe that these same fine young people have broken down forever the barriers of misunderstanding with the greatest democracy in the world? Is it too much to hope that the day will come when we and they shall be embraced in a real alliance against war—the only hope as we see it, that peace can ever be brought back and retained throughout the world?"

SCOT WEAKENS ON DARE

David Kirkwood (LEFT), fiery Labor member of the House of Commons from Glasgow, weakened June 14 in his plan to become a parliamentary Tarzan on Lady Astor's deer preserve island off the Scottish coast. In the House, the day before, Kirkwood and other Laborites demanded that 2,000,000 acres of land held in Scotland for "sports" purposes be utilized for the support of human beings, not animals. Lady Astor challenged Kirkwood to make a living on a part of the Astor holdings, and Kirkwood accepted. Then he found that the land Lady Astor (RIGHT) referred to was on the Isle of Jura, one of the most rugged of the Inner Hebrides, surrounded by whirlpools and rushing tides and swept by Atlantic gales. It is 25 miles off the coast and can be reached in three hours by boat—in fair weather, when boats can reach it at all.

Two Miners at Geraldton Die from Carbon Monoxide

Geraldton, June 21 (Special)—Carbon monoxide fumes took the lives of two miners at Magnet Consolidated Mines, near here, early Tuesday.

The men were Nick Fairburn, machinist and his helper, Norman Welch. Fairburn leaves a widow and one small child, while Welch is survived by his father and brother.

When the men failed to come to the surface as the night crews finished duty, rescue crews went down to the second and third levels and found the bodies. Details of the accident are meagre, but it is learned the two men had returned to their posts in a rise on the third level after the lunch hour. It is believed they encountered a gas pocket and were overcome before they had a chance to reach fresh air.

The bodies of the men were discovered approximately one hour after the accident by Peter Doran, shift boss and a group of miners.

That Body of Hours

(By James W. Barton, M.D.)

During the examination of recruits for the Great War, any case with a marked degree of varicose veins in the legs was rejected as being on the feet in the standing position for long periods would be sure to make the condition worse.

The injection method was known but not highly regarded at that time and so if these men were very anxious to proceed overseas, they were sent into hospital, underwent operation, remained about three weeks in the hospital and were then put on "light duty" for about three months before doing the marching or other military duties of their unit.

To-day there are more cases with varicose veins undergo the injection treatment than the operation due to the fact that more thorough is given to each and only those cases that can expect satisfactory results from injection or operation are given treatment. That is, each case is tested as to the ability of the deep lying veins to do their work should the large knotted and twisted veins on the outside be removed by injection or operation.

After observing the condition of the veins as the patient walks about, a tourniquet—tight band—is put around the upper leg or thigh and the patient again walks around the room. Usually the veins do not stand out so prominently because the deeper veins not only do the work but seem to draw some of the blood out of the outer varicose veins. This is good evidence that should these outer varicose veins be removed, the inner or deep veins can carry on the circulation properly.

When the tight band makes no improvement in the appearance of the veins or when the veins stand out even worse, then it is not considered wise to destroy these outer veins either by injection method or by surgery.

When these veins are not very large or there are but a few of them, simply injecting the veins with a hardening solution will destroy them. When veins are very prominent it is often necessary to tie off the large veins, high up in the thigh, feeding the veins high up in the leg before the injections are made into these veins.

It is certainly gratifying to know that this injection method has been perfected, when we remember all the time and money saved by this injection method, aside from the prevention of varicose ulcers which often occur with these varicose veins.

SIFTING THE NEWS

By Hugh Murphy

The 100-mile long and 60 yard wide Suez Canal is owned by an Egyptian Company, Compagnie Universelle du Canal Maritime de Suez. Its neutrality, even in war, is technically guaranteed by international agreement. Nineteen of the 32 directors are French, ten are British, two Egyptian, one Dutch.

Thirteen reductions in rates have been made since the World War but tolls are still $1.38 a loaded ton going through and 71 cents a ton for ballast. There is a charge of $1.38 for every adult passenger and 71 cents for every child between 3 and 12 years. The Empress of Britain has paid as high as $50,000 one way.

For a long time Italians have clamored for lower canal tolls and representation on the Board of Directors, chiefly because Italy spends much money on canal tolls to keep in touch with Italian East Africa and because Italy's tonnage through the canal (16.7% in 1937) is high—second only to that of Britain.

An argument advanced as a reason why Italy should have representation was that three obscure Italian engineers assisted the famous Ferdinand de Lesseps to plan and dig the ditch. Their names: Negrelli, Torelli and Paleocapa.

When Suez directors recently gathered for their annual meeting they ridiculed Italy's argument. It was based on bad faith or ignorance, said suave President of the Board, Marquis de Vogue. Negrelli was not an Italian but an Australian, he said. A year before canal digging started he died. Torelli did not become interested in Suez until the canal was almost finished and Paleocapa refused a job at Suez because he went blind.

The British government has announced a tax which will be popular—except for a few merchants in death. It is the imposition of a 60 per cent tax on excess profits of companies receiving more than $1,000,000 worth of rearmament orders in a single year.

The imposition of the tax is made more impressive inasmuch as it is imposed during the regime of an overwhelmingly Conservative government—one which in the past, has resisted every effort to expose the activities of armament makers or to control their huge profits.

Indicative of the secrecy surrounding the industry is the fact that the government has no idea whatsoever of what the annual yield from the tax will be. It could probably have been killed by the products of armament makers and make some estimate of the annual yield but it has no idea of what a tax on profits might bring.

The tax is for three years, and apparently, a very complicated and expensive one. It would need to be.

Perhaps the fact that a general election is coming on might have something to do with its imposition.

A news story in The Advance this issue tells of a fishing trip from Cobalt. One member of the party caught a seven pound pickerel. On its nose were firmly fastened a pair of eyeglasses. . . . no fooling.

The story suggests another told of the North. A Northerner was telling (with perhaps a shade of over-statement) of the size of mosquitoes in the Cobalt district. He saw a flight go by his window one day, he said. Immediately he ran for the shotgun as he knew there was a team of horses standing near the stable. However, when he got to the door he was too late. The mosquitoes had eaten the horses and were tossing the horseshoes for the harness.

Japan and great Britain remain deadlocked in the Orient. Since Japan threw a blockade around the British and French concessions in the city of Tientsin and refused to allow the entry of food, tension has been growing. Diplomats are of the opinion that the move is the first in a Japanese plan to take over all foreign concessions in China.

The United States has protested but still the Japanese military command—smug in its position of holding the whip hand—offers no indication that there will be an end to the blockade.

Japan now occupies the favourable position in which the British must carry the burden of finding a peace formula, one spokesman is reported to have said.

Irony:

A forgotten tombstone in Bucharest's Jewish cemetery carried the inscription "Here rest the mortal remains of the deceased Adolph Hitler who died on October 26th, 1892, at the age of 60. Pray for him". The Jewish society to which Hitler belonged added "Love thy neighbour."

Eight Cases of Dynamite Stolen Near Kirkland

Powder House of Construction Company Broken Into.

Kirkland Lake, June 21—Police are conducting a very earnest and energetic search to locate the thieves and eight cases of dynamite stolen from the powder house of the Dominion Construction Company on Highway No. 11, a short distance south of Kirkland Lake. The break-in was first noticed on Monday morning. It is thought that the robbery occurred some time on Sunday, and that a truck was used to take the explosives away. The powder house is located on the side of a hill with only the entrance above ground. Entrance was made from the front after the earth had been shoveled away from the front of the covered roof.

One of the few clues held by the police is the fact that the stolen dynamite is the only explosive of its kind in use in the district. The mines use 40 per cent Forcite, while the stolen explosive is 60 per cent Forcite. The whole district is being combed by the police in the hopes of finding the stolen explosives.

Why the Nail Wouldn't Drive into the One Wall

A lunatic in the asylum was trying to knock a nail into the wall. But he had the head of the nail against the wood and was hammering the point.

At length he threw down the nail in disgust and said: "Bah. Idiots. They gave me a nail with the head at the wrong end."

Another inmate who had been watching him began to laugh.

"It's you what's the idiot," he said. "Why?"

The other man jerked his thumb at the opposite wall.

"Nail was made for the other side of the room," he said.

On another occasion the same two were digging an air-raid shelter. But the crisis passed, so they decided to fill up the trench. They did so and were dismayed to find a great heap of earth left over.

"I told you," said the first lunatic. "I said all along that we should have dug the hole deeper." From The Courier, London.
