F. J. Crawford the New President of Exchange

Toronto, June 21.—With the closing of nominations for the officers of the Managing Committee of The Toronto Stock Exchange, Frederick J. Crawford has been elected President by acclamation to succeed Frank G. Lawson, whose Presidential term of office is to expire at the annual meeting June 22nd.

Position of Vice-President was filled by Gordon R. Bongard, while T. A. Richardson was made Secretary and R. B. Duggan, Treasurer, all of whom take office by acclamation.

The new President, Frederick J. Crawford of F. J. Crawford & Co., makes the 41st incumbent to hold office of The Toronto Stock Exchange. He became a member of the Standard Stock & Mining Exchange in 1919 and was elected to the Committee of the Exchange in 1921. From then until the amalgamation with The Toronto Stock Exchange he served continuously in Committee, holding the office of President in 1926-27 and again in 1930-31. With the merger in 1934 he was again elected to the Committee, last year being made Vice-President on the death of the Hon. Manning W. Doherty who then held the office.

Mr. Crawford has been an important factor in the financing of a number of successful mining operations, having been instrumental in bringing much American capital to the country. He is a director of The Trusts & Guarantee Co., Ltd., Maple Leaf Gardens, Limited and the Toronto Baseball Club Limited. Is interested in golf, being a member of the Lambton Golf Club, a director of the Briars Golf & Country Club and also president of the Acton Trout Club.

The new Vice-President, Gordon R. Bongard, is a member of the firm of Bongard & Company. He has been on the Exchange Committee since 1929. Was educated at Toronto University and R.M.C. and served with the artillery overseas.

Port Arthur News-Chronicle: Business is reported to have been better throughout Canada during the period of the royal tour. People have had opportunity to think of something other than European war scares fomented by two dictators. The whole world, dictator nations included, would speedily find better times if two men could be induced to take an indefinite holiday.

More Helpful Hints on Control of Garden Pests

Now is the Time to Apply Preventive Treatment. Good Sprayer is Necessary to Protect the Garden. Best Methods to Use to Prevent Damage from Cutworms.

(Contributed by Timmins Horticultural Society)

As the weather becomes warmer we must expect garden pests to multiply and gain voracity. It is useless to wait until the damage is done before applying preventive treatment, and it is well to be prepared to extend a welcoming hand early, but let it hold a spray gun. For effective work a good sprayer is necessary; one that will hold at least a quart of solution and spread it far and wide in the shortest space of time. A cheap ineffective sprayer is discouraging to the user and is soon worn out.

Last week we issued a warning to be on the alert for cuckoo-spit, or spit-bug. These small creatures are not easily detected unless looked for carefully but they can do an infinite amount of damage in the border if they are not dealt with promptly. The first sign of their presence is twisted and contorted foliage. The damage goes far deeper than that and if neglected may be almost irreparable. Spray with a solution of nicotine sulphate: one half-teaspoonful to a quart of water, using a few chips of a mild soap to make the solution stick. Emulsified oil of eucalyptus seems to be effective, using two tablespoonful to a quart of water, adding one half-teaspoonful of nicotine sulphate. The first spraying should clear the plants but it is advisable to spray more than once to destroy successive batches.

There is another pest just around the corner waiting to take the place of the spit-bug, fortunately the latter does not stay with us very long. Most gardeners are very well acquainted with the cut-worm, so much so that many amateur gardeners would probably give up gardening entirely if he ceased to exist, although, to be sure, one would hardly call him sociable. The cut-worm leaves the scene of its activities during the day, contrary to the habits of most caterpillars it feeds only at night, and no insect is more industrious. They attack all garden plants, particularly when these are young and succulent, and its first step is to cut the plant off close to the ground, so that the plant is entirely destroyed. During the day the cut-worm can often be found coiled hidden under the soil near the roots of the plant that it has cut down. It grows to a length of an inch or an inch and a half when mature. It is dark brown, almost black in colour with a tough-looking leathery skin. A simple means of control is to moisten one quart of bran with water, until it is crumbly to the touch, not sodden. To the moistened bran add one tablespoonful of paris green and stir until well mixed. To the above add one teaspoonful of paris green and stir again until the mixture is tinted green. Scatter this mash lightly among your plants and they will be fairly safe as the cut-worm seems to relish the mixture above everything else. One sprinkling about every ten days is usually sufficient in dry weather, but the paris green leaches very quickly during a heavy rainstorm and during wet weather, the mash should be applied more frequently.

Zinnias, Snapdragons and Dahlias can be made to grow more bushy by pinching off the tops when they have attained a height of three or four inches. This is usually done after they have grown their fourth set of leaves. Pinching off the tops results in a dual system of branching at the joint immediately below the stalk pinched off; instead of a single stalk the plant will divide into two branches and the flower stems will thereby be increased. By the way—if your Dahlias are not progressing fast enough to please you dissolve one ounce of nitrate of soda in a gallon of water and give the ground a good soaking.

Fifteen Days for Drunken Car Driver Six Months for Theft

Policeman Says Mokokruk Dazed and Sleepy at Wheel After Accident.

Despite strenuous efforts on the part of his defence counsel, Mike Mokokruk was found guilty of driving while drunk, in police court on Tuesday. He was sent to jail for fifteen days. He was ordered to pay the court costs and his car was impounded for three months.

On June 9, said Constable Barlow, at 11:20 p.m. he saw Mokokruk's car coming down Mountjoy Street. It had no lights and was swerving back and forth. It struck a parked car doing $30 damage. He jumped on the side and was dragged 5 to 10 feet before he managed to make the driver stop the automobile.

When he looked at Mokokruk, the latter was in a dazed condition and his head was slumped on his chest. He was half asleep. "He was drunk," said the Constable.

"I came to the conclusion he was under the influence of an alcoholic stimulant," said Dr. Anderson telling of his examination of the accused.

On the stand Mokokruk said that he had had four glasses of beer earlier in the evening. He was not drunk at the time and was zig-zagging on the road because he was trying out the steering gear on his car.

Six Months to Remember
 David Edward Houle said that he did not remember stealing either a jewel case or a barber's kit. He told the court he was drunk at the time. A lengthy record of offences was read out. Asked if it was correct that he had been during vile so many times and up before a court of law so many times, he said that all the many charges and convictions which were read out, were correct—except one—he could not place it. It was not surprising in view of the number. In any event he will have six months in jail in which to try and recall it.

Saga of the Iron
 J. E. Chateauvert, manager of the Ideal Hardware, said that he saw a man—to him unknown—steal an electric iron from his store. He got outside and signalled to Charles Mann. They went up the street and he later saw Mann with the iron under his coat. Charged with receiving stolen goods, Mann said that he never saw the man before and that he asked him to hold the iron while he went home for a parcel.

His story did not receive credence in court and 30 days was his lot.

Guilty of Assault
 Roy Caesar pleaded guilty to assaulting his wife. He was asked to sign a bond of $200 that he would keep the peace. "I can't live with that man. He says he will send the baby to a home," said the wife. "They are living together. I can't separate them," said the Magistrate passing on to the next case.

Biographical Notes on the Inventor of Stethoscope

In its regular feature "Brief Biographies of Eminent Men", the quarterly publication of the Health League of Canada gives this sketch of Rene Laennec:

A great Frenchman began his career when Laennec was born at Quimper in Lower Brittany in 1781. The natives of Brittany are close kin to that other Celtic race the Welsh in England. Laennec began life under distressing circumstances for, when he was under five years of age, his mother died of consumption, the lung affection now universally known as pulmonary tuberculosis. This fact is of importance for the same disease seriously handicapped and finally terminated his life at 45 years of age. The child, with his brothers and sisters was brought up by an uncle who was a cure, that is, a priest. Then he went to another uncle, a medical man. He received a good classical education and his medical environment no doubt determined his choice of profession. At 19 he went to Paris to complete his medical education. There he came under the influence of Napoleon's great physician, Corvisart. The latter, recognizing the bright mind of Laennec, encouraged and talked with his pupil.

The young man plunged into work with an energy greater than his physical powers and at 35 years of age was a visiting physician to the Necker Hospital.

Laennec's greatest achievement was the invention of the stethoscope. In making this discovery he turned to good account his knowledge. "I had observed," he said, "That one can hear with great distinctness the scratch of a pin at one end of a piece of wood on applying one's ear to the other." Applying this suggestion he rolled a require of paper into a kind of cylinder and applied one end of it to the region of the heart and the other to his ear. By this means he was surprised that he could hear the heart sounds much more clearly than he had been able to do by the immediate application of his ear to the chest. From this simple beginning came the perfection of the stethoscope, one of the most useful instruments of every modern doctor.

In 1822 Laennec was appointed to the chair of medicine in the College of France, and in the following year he succeeded his revered teacher Corvisart as full professor of medicine. He was worked too hard. His health broke down; he went home with a dry cough. The circumstances of his boyhood, the association with consumptive mother, his close application to hospital and literary work, cut short a great career prematurely and he died in 1826.

Laennec is the patron saint of workers in tuberculosis not only in France but wherever his history is known. He was a great man.

Huntingdon Gleaner: When Mrs. Iola Martin slammed the door of her home at Ontario, Calif., on the way out, she heard a commotion on the roof accompanied by a flapping of wings. Then an avalanche of fish rolled down, several of them striking Mrs. Martin. Explanation—a flock of cranes had landed on the Martin roof with fish caught in the ocean nearby. Mrs. Martin's slamming the door frightened the birds away and a dozen perch slid off the roof, fresh and ready for the ice box.

GIRLS AND GIRLS, CLOWNS AND CLOWNS

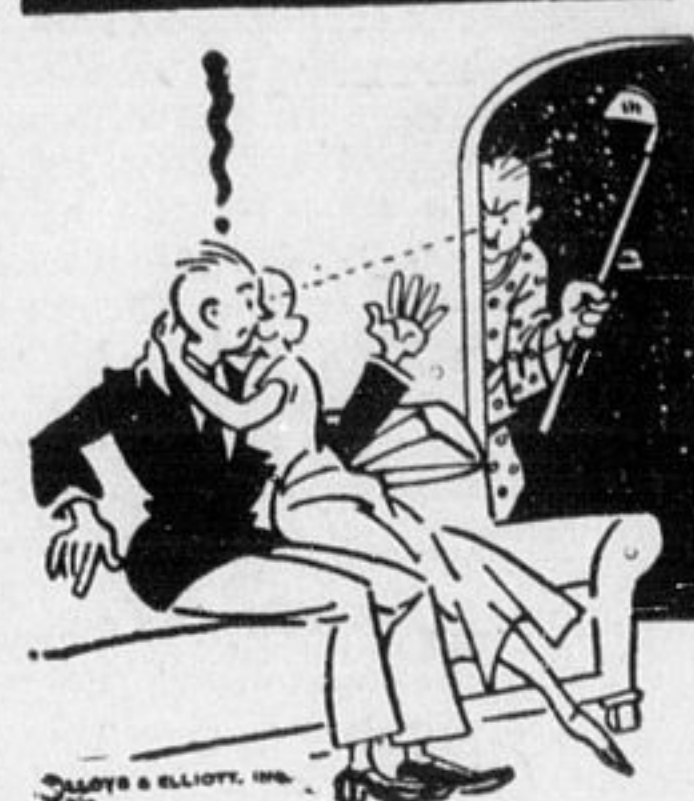

Girls and girls, clowns and clowns, without them there would be no circus. When the Cole Bros. Circus with its great star, Art Mix the Western movie actor and cowboy invades Timmins on Monday, July 3rd, for performances at 2 and 8 p.m. there will be 60 clowns and 100 girls.

Circuses of the better class look after the welfare of their women performers with a surprising regard to detail. They are provided with a special sleeping car in which to live while on the road. Conversation with strangers is prohibited.

Looking after the ballet girls or other unmarried feminine members of the circus is the "mother." She is one of the most interesting characters of the circus. In short, she is a chaperon.

Mrs. Claudia White, the chaperon with the Cole Bros. Circus, through her long experience with life under the "big top" has become familiar with every detail of the business and she knows what to do when an emergency arises. Men and women alike come to her with the petty troubles that are bound to occur in the uncertain and strenuous existence they lead.
