Bears Often Seen at the Ankerite Mines These Days

Show Little Fear of Human Beings.

South Porcupine, June 28th. Special to The Advance.

An interesting jaunt these early summer evenings would be to the Buffalo-Ankerite "dump" which is just outside the environs of the little community on the road to the "Concordia" mine.

Bears are there! Big bears and little bears and middle size bears who are not in the least disturbed by the rubber-shod monsters of the present age which come quite close to watch them.

Every evening the bear colony has a family party at the dump. Those who have observed have found out interesting things about the ursine genus which make us wonder whether there is really any connection between some people we know and the bear tribe.

Papa Bear is obviously boss. To him alone belongs the delight of opening surprise packages in paper bags and first pickings of choice bits belong to father.

There are no tiny bears this year, but last year residents tell us, that there were two little ones, and while no female of the species dared come too close while the Head of the Family was exploring, he graciously allowed the babies to follow him and have first chance at what he left.

Residents at the mine are used to the bears by now, as each year they have provided interest, have given no evidences of ferocity, and have been unmolested.

A man recently employed, though we hear on good authority, was late on shift on one occasion and told that on coming out of his house he had seen a large bear on his garden path.

Not wishing to start an argument, he said, he had to wait till the bear moved off before he could go to work.

It is not unusual to see twenty cars parked on the road near the dump, filled with interested lookers-on, and bears on the less frequented roads in this vicinity have been seen by quite a few people. In the latter event it is advisable to let Bruin have the right of way.

Another Newspaper Urges Compulsory Car Insurance

(From Amherstburg Echo)

Already this spring in Essex County has occurred a number of motor car accidents in which pedestrians were badly injured by cars on which no insurance was carried, and whose drivers were not financially worth a trial for damages. One Sandwich man had suffered a multiple fracture of a leg; had several ribs broken, received lacerations of the head, which will confine him to hospital for weeks and probably lay him up for a year, yet he has no redress against the driver, whose car was one of those running around the roads without public liability insurance. The Echo has time and again suggested that there should be compulsory insurance for all cars, and more especially no American car should be permitted to cross the border unless insurance of this kind is carried on it, so in case of an accident damages can be collected.
