A TIME FOR COURAGE

It was heart-breaking news that reached here yesterday. Over the radio came the story that Russian troops had invaded Poland, that the Polish government had retreated to Rumanian territory, along with the British and French Missions to Poland, that some Polish troops had sought refuge in Rumania, and that under the additional brutal pressure, Poland could not hope to hold out much longer. In the past two weeks, the Polish people have won the admiration of the whole civilized world by the gallant and undaunted battle they have put up in defense of liberty and their land. Feats of courage and determination that will win a place in history have been recorded of the Polish armies. People in Canada and other lands have followed the battle with the keenest interest and the most earnest prayers for final victory by the gallant Polish people. To see the Polish people fall victims to the brutal and unprincipled aggressors is a personal sorrow to all right-thinking people. The poet Campbell said that "Freedom shrieked when Koschiuski fell." A modern poet may well say that the whole civilized world wept to see the Polish people enslaved, though it be but for a season.

It is assuredly a time for sorrow. But still more is it a time for courage, for determination, for renewed pledges and revived faith. The Polish people themselves have shown the way. The armies of Poland still say they will die fighting—that they will carry on to the end. There will be time enough later for sorrow and sadness and sympathy for Poland. Now is the time for renewed effort, for help, for faith in the future, for determination to make that future right.

In passing it might be noted that the situation is not as black as it might be. In Britain there is belief that Russia may not have actually joined the enemy. Russia still maintains that it is standing neutral. The invasion of Poland is explained as necessary to restore order there and to protect the interests of the Soviet in general and safeguard the safety of Russian people in the territory concerned. There is a suggestion that Russia's action is to prevent Germany's dominance of Poland, rather than to assist Germany in its destruction.

Taking the situation at its darkest, however, the call is for courage, rather than for tears. If Russia, despite its protestations to the contrary, has joined Nazi Germany in effort to conquer all Europe, then the need is for the more determination to fight the aggressors. The fate of Poland should to-day add flames to the fervour with which the enemies of civilization, of freedom and decency must be fought. Britain and France are facing a new situation, calmly and courageously, the more determined than ever, that this war shall be fought to a finish, and that no peace shall be made until the brutal aggressors are defeated. From London, England, there comes the suggestion that Poland may still hold out until help may reach that land. In the meantime, the French and British continue to press their advance into Germany itself. For the first time in modern history Germany is having a taste of war within its own borders. For the first time, the people of Germany are experiencing the death and destruction that war brings. They must know also that this is but the beginning and that much worse is to follow inevitably. Before long there will be a different sentiment in Germany in regard to war. How long the people of Germany will endure what is to come remains for the years to prove. At present for the Allies there is nothing to do but to face the situation with increased courage and determination and with faith undimmed in the assurance that justice and liberty and right will win the final battle. The new situation may add some years to the battle, and so all should gird themselves to face a long and arduous conflict, but beneath all this there should be the firmest confidence that the military might of the Allies, the great resources in men, money and supplies of the British Empire, France and the others fighting on the side of right, buttressed by the strength of a righteous cause, can not fail to triumph.

GRAVEL AND SAND—AND PLACER

There is a decided touch of the absurd in the fact that Canada is so ill-prepared for war that the uniforms have been called in from existing militia regiments so that the recruits in Canada's Active Service Force will not be compelled to parade in their shirt tails. There is a vulgar expression about a man being caught with his pants down. Apparently the Minister of Militia was in worse plight being caught without any pants at all for the new members of the family. But, perhaps, the Minister of Militia, being a Highlander, wears only the kilt.

ON WINNING THE WAR

Canadians and other Britishers are not in the habit of flaunting their loyalty to the Empire and to the cause of right. When occasion arises, however, the depth of their loyalty is beyond question. Because of this fact, there is on all sides to-day, expressions of enquiry as to what may be done to help win the present war. Everyone seems sincerely anxious to help. The Government, indeed, seems to lag behind popular demand in regard to Canada's contribution to the winning of the war. It is likely that in the days to come popular opinion will force a more energetic and broader part for Canada in the war.

For the moment, the best contribution by the average man or woman is to keep a firm faith and a cheerful courage, and do the day's work as effectively as possible. At present Canada can best help by carrying on business a little better than usual. A busy and prosperous Dominion will be a notable strength to the Empire and the cause of the Allies. Until definite tasks are ordered, attending to the business at hand is the best service. There should be no profiteering of any kind. All efforts should be given to speeding up business

A PERTINENT QUESTION

The other day a Timmins young man asked a question that it would be well for all to consider every time there is any talk of peace in the world. This young man said he was ready to enlist for the defence of Canada and the Empire and for the cause of right and freedom in the world. "But," he asked, "What's the use, if the same thing is to happen every twenty-five years?" He added that Germany had started wars of aggression approximately every twenty-five years for the past century or so. "Is this to be continued indefinitely?" he asked. "Is there any sense in sacrificing the lives of the young men of the nations every twenty-five years? That's what I want to know," he said.

This young man believed that freedom was worth defending, that the British Empire was worth the sacrifice even of life itself. But why make it a game or a celebration every quarter century? Why not decide it once for all?

Young men often have questions but this young man also had the answer. "Why not treat war like other criminal activities are treated?" he asked. "If you make war unprofitable, there will not be recurring wars every twenty-five years" he said. Pressed for definite details of his ideas about peace plans, he said:—"The whole idea of dealing with criminals is to discourage crime by making it definitely unprofitable. When you catch a burglar you not only take away from him his illegal gains, but you certainly don't allow him to retain his burglary tools and equipment and add to them so that he starts into business again as soon as his term has expired. My idea of the next peace would be to strip the criminals of all their gangster equipment and restrain them from gathering new tools or planning new crimes. If the aggressor nations were placed under police guard for twenty years or so, there would be no new war twenty-five years afterwards. Robbery brings the penalty of loss of liberty for terms of years, murder is punishable by death, and the proven traitor pays both with the loss of his life and the confiscation of his estate. The gangster nations are no more than robbers, murderers, traitors to humanity. Why not deal with them as such? Break them up, police them, keep them from getting new tools and equipment, and there would be no need to have war every twenty-five years. That's what I think." And that is a thought that will find firm root in the minds of most thoughtful people. For the moment there is a world conflagration to be fought. When it is subdued and conquered—as it will be without fail—thoughts might well turn to the truth kept well in mind that criminality is never hampered by disarming of the forces of law and order.

"I would strongly advise parents to have their children's eyes examined. There is nothing that will retard a child's progress so much as eye trouble. In the first place they must see clearly in order to learn. Secondly, the strain on their nervous system from trying to see in spite of defective vision may undermine their health. Poor sight during school years may handicap a child for life."

Suggests New Style of Brigade to Fight the Hun

Old Soldiers Never Die, Nor Ever Lose Their Humour

Timmins, Sept. 16th, 1939. To the Editor of The Advance, Timmins, Ont.

Dear Sir:—Canteen rumours are flying thick and fast these days. You hear a piece of news and five minutes later you hear it again with an addition. Before the day is over you hear the same small piece of news built up to novelette size. All these things don't bother the older people but the younger ones hang on to every rumour with baited breath in the same manner that we used to do in the last war.

However, a lot of old-timers are moaning over the fact that only fit men are wanted; they feel the blood surging again in their veins and it is laughable to her some of the things which these old-timers ask each other.

One man asks another:—"How are you going to manage without any teeth?"

"Well," replied the other, "they will give me a suit of clothes, a hat and a pair of shoes. They will give me a rifle and a bayonet and a pack. While they are about it, they can throw in a set of teeth, can't they?"

Then another chimes in, saying: "My wind is not as good as it was once."

"That won't bother you any," was the reply, "when someone is after you with a bayonet."

Then they began reminiscing on the old days and how a man had to be a certain height to join the army and how all the small men were broken-hearted until some one thought of forming the Pantlams and that Battalion or Regiment, or whatever it was, made a name for itself.

Then somebody got a happy thought and expressed it.

"Don't worry, boys," he said, "we're all right. It won't be so very long before someone will be forming a cripples' brigade, and our old-timers will be back with the boys again."

"What could we do?" he was asked.

"When we got him on the run he would be dug in before we could catch up to him."

"Why," he was told, "the young fellows could keep him running after we got him started, and if he made a stand we would be coming up as reinforcements, wouldn't we?"

"Hm! there is something in that," he was told, "but on the other hand suppose he got us on the run, what then?"

"That is where we shine," he was told. "Who ever heard of a bunch of cripples running?"

Yours most sincerely,
 A. J. Doling.
