The Lights Of Home

(From an Exchange)

Through the blackness of the night, the warden plodded on his rounds. Stumbling up and down kerbs and round corners, he suddenly realized he was lost.

But, hold, there was a gleam of light in the darkness—in that house across the street, a strong glimmer shone from an upstairs window.

Groping his way across the road, he knocked on the door. It was opened by some invisible person.

"One of your bedroom lights is showing," he said sternly; "please put it out, and—"

A voice he knew interrupted him.

"Come in and put it out yourself, idiot! You left it on!"

A HARD HITTER

St. Catharines Standard: General Jan Smuts, Premier of South Africa, has been a hard hitter in actual war, and he has no less a pretty hefty punch in politics. Referring to Pirow of the former Government, who quit on his promise of aid to the Empire in case of war, General Smuts said: "Mr. Pirow may change his politics as often as he changes his shirt, but Africa does not change its honor like that." As a great Afrikaner, Smuts surely has a powerful command of the English language.
